It cannot be presumed as a matter of law that the state of things described in the thak and Survey maps existed at the time of the Permanent Settlement The question, what lands were included in the Permanent Settlement, is a question of fact and not of law which may or may not be satisfactorily proved by subsequent Survey maps. The onus of proving that any particular lands were included in the Permanent Settlement of 1793 is on those who affirm that such was the case, and the burden of proof is not necessarily shifted by the production of the thak and Survey maps showing that specific lands are included in a particular estate The thak and Survey maps are valuable evidence of the state of things at the time they were made, but it does not follow that they show conclusively what was the state of things at the time of the Permanent Settlement [p 8 9, col 2.]

A suit to recover possession of a land from a trespasser by the plaintiff who became entitled to possession only after the determination of a limited or particular estate held by another, whatever its precise nature might have been, and when that estate did not fall into possession until the death of the holder of the limited estate, is governed by Article 140 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. In such a case Article 142 cannot apply where the plaintiff was never in fact dispossessed; nor can Article 144 apply, as possession of a trespasser cannot be deemed adverse against a person not entitled to be in possession at that time. JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—The subject matter of the litigations which have led up to the present appeals is an extensive tract of alluvial land and covers an area of about six thousand bighas The plaintiffs in the two suits so messed below claim title to different shares in this tract of land. It is not necessary for our present purpose to set out in detail the shares claimed by these persons respectively; it is sufficient to state that the plaintiffs taken together as a body claim to be entitled to the disputed lands as reformation in situ of the permanently settled estates Nos. 26, 31 and 774 461 of the Mymensing Collectorate. The two last named estates have been transferred to the district of Pabna and bear Nos. 343 and 907 on the Revenue Rolls of the Collectorate of that district. These three estates comprised lands in the two districts, and the subject-matters of the two suits are situated in the Pabna district. The case for the plaintiffs in both the suits is, that these three estates which are permanently settled include the disputed lands as comprised within the Mouzas and Paras (villages and their hamlets) mentioned in the plaint, namely, Mouza Argyola including its Para Mehernagar, Mouzas Purbapara, Raneepur, Habbaspur, Dighalia, Idil Jangalia, Javariapara, Mouza Gajansahar, known as Laskarpur, including its Para Sonekalsi, Kismat Kathenga, Kismat Matiahati, Mouza Kowapara or Kowabari, Mouza Kole, Mouza Noada or Gopalbari including its Para Majitbari. The plaintiffs assert that their predecessors-in-interest were in possession of these Mouzas from the time of the Permanent Settlement, that while they were in possession, some of the Mouzas were wholly and others were partly washed away by the strong current of the river Jamuna (a section of the river Brahmaputra) before the Thak and Revenue Surveys, that accordingly they could not be surveyed by the Revenue Authorities at the time except in so far as there were dry lands not submerged in the river, that the lands subsequently re-formed from time to time, and that when the lands emerged from the river and became fit for occupation possession was wrongfully taken on behalf of the Secretary of State. On these allegations the plaintiffs seek to recover possession with mesne profits. The claim was contested by the Secretary of State on the allegation that the suits were barred by limitation and that the disputed lands did not form part of the Mouzas mentioned in the plaints as comprised in the three permanently settled estates Nos. 26, 333 and 907. It was further asserted that in 1891, an island chur (subsequently named Chur Bell) was discovered in the bed of the Jamuna or Brahmaputra which is a public navigable river so that its bed was not the property of any individual, but belonged to Government; the disputed lands in reality formed part of this chur and of the accretions thereto. On these pleadings, eight issues were framed in the following terms and were set down for trial:—

(1) Is the suit barred by special limitation?

(2) Is the suit barred by general limitation?

(3) Have the plaintiffs acquired a right by adverse possession of the disputed lands for over sixty years?

(4) Do the disputed lands appertain to the several Mouzas claimed by the plaintiffs and are those lands permanently settled with them and have the plaintiffs any right to the Mouzas and their Paras, as mentioned in the plaints?

(5) Is the allegation of diluvion and alluvion as given in the plaint correct?

(6) Is the description of the disputed lands and Mouzas as given in the plaints correct?

(7) Is Mehernagar a Para of Argyola? Does Mouza Sonekalsi belong to the plaintiffs? Does Majidbari belong to the plaintiffs and is it a Para of Gobalbari? Is Para Matiahatte the same as Mouza Matiahatte and does Matiahatte belong to the plaintiffs? Is Gajansahar another name of Laskarpur with Para Sonekalsi? Is the disputed land part of Gajansahar or Sonekalsi?

(8) Is the plaintiff entitled to get any wasilat? If so, how much?

The Subordinate Judge appointed a Commissioner for local investigation, who submitted with his report a case map after relaying the Revenue Survey maps of the several Mouzas the Dearah Survey map, the Settlement map of Chur Bell and of Chur Sahapur. The Commissioner came to the conclusion that Chur Bell of 1901 falls within the disputed lands and occupies the site of what was the entire bed of the river Jamuna at the time of the Revenue Survey with small encroachments on the Revenue Survey Mouzas Dighulia, Idil Jangalia and Tookra Gohalbari No. 2 on the east bank, on Mouza Matiahatte on the south, and on Saray Mouzas Khidder, Kathenga, Kole, Habbaspur, Raneepur, Laskarpur and Parbapara on the west. No exception was taken to the accuracy of the map and report submitted by the Commissioner, and the Subordinate Judge consequently accepted them as correct. On their basis, taken along with the voluminous evidence on the record, the Subordinate Judge held that the lands in suit were comprised within Mouzas Parbapara, Argyola, Mehernagar, Gajansahar, or Laskarpur with Para Sonekalsi, Raneepur, Habbaspur, Kole, Jangalia, Kathenga with Matiahati, Gohalbari and Majitbari, Asabpur or Asarpara and Chuk Jangalia and Chuk Gohalbari and Dighalia. The Subordinate Judge also found that Mouza Argyola, including its Para Mehernagar, Mouza Parbapara, Mouza Gajansahar or Laskarpur with its Para Sonekalsi, Mouzas Raneepur, Habbaspur, Dighulia, and Idil Jangalia appertain entirely to estate No. 26, that eight annas of Mouza Kathenga, including its Para Matiahati, the twelve annas of Mouza Kowabari and the eight annas of Javariapara are also comprised in estate No. 26, and that the remaining eight annas of Kismat Kathenga, including its Para now Mouza Mattiahatte, the entire Mouza Kole and Noada known as Gohalbari are comprised in estate No. 344 and the remaining four annas of Kowabari to estate No, 907. The Subordinate Judge also held that the plaintiffs had failed to establish their alleged right to Majitbari and to prove that it is a Para of Gohalbari Upon the question of limition, the Subordinate Judge found in favour of the plaintiffs except as to a small portion. On these findings, the Subordinate Judge decreed the suits in part. On the present appeals, the decrees of the Subordinate Judge have been challenged substantially on two grounds, namely, first, that the plaintiffs have failed to establish their title to the disputed lands as appertaining to Argyola. Meherdanga Laskarpur, Kathenga and Gohalbari and, secondly, that the claim is barred by limitation.

As regards the question of title, the case for the Secretary of State was that the plaintiffs must be restricted to the lands shown as included within their permanently settled estates in the Thak and Revenue Survey maps. This position is clearly untenable As was pointed out by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Jogadindra Nath v. Secretary of State for India (1) and by this Court in Ananda Hari Bisak v. Secretary of State for India (2), it cannot be presumed as a matter of law that the state of things described in the Thak and Survey maps existed at the time of the Permanent Settlement. The question, what lands were included in the Permanent Settlement, is a question of fact and not of law which may or may not be satisfactorily proved by subsequent Survey maps. The onus of proving that any particular lands were included in the Permanent Settlement of 1793 is clearly on those who affirm that such was the case, and the burden of proof is not necessarily shifted by the production of the Thak and Survey maps showing that specific lands are included in a particular estate. The Thak and Survey maps are valuable evidence of the state of things at the time they were made, but it does not follow that they show conclusively what was the state of things at the time of the Permanent Settlement. In the case before us, it appears that at the time of the Revenue Survey maps, Beal Kamlai and Argyola, Goyla Dabu in the north lay wholly or mostly under water, but that the limits of these Mouzas were shown in the Revenue Survey map; it further appears that Argyola, Goyla Dabu lay to the east of Beal Kamlai and that to the east of Argyola Goyla Dabu lay on the east bank the Mouza Meererpara, and to its east, Mouza Argyola of Isafsahi, and on the west of Beal Kamlai, lay the village of Hatboyra on the west bank, and that between Hatboyra on the west and Meererpara on the east, flowed the main channel of the river Jamuna, and that as the river ran from there southwards, it had on its east bank, Mouza Dighulia, to the south of Meererpara, Mouza Edil Jangalia and Tookra Gohalbari No. 2, both lying to the south, one after the other, of Dighulia; on the west bank of the river opposite the Mouza Meererpara from the north to Mouza Tookra Gohalbari No. 2 to the south lay then the Mouzas Purbapara, Laskarpur Raneepur, Habbaspur, Kathenga and Khidder, from north to south, while between Kathenga and Khidder on the one side and Tookra Gohalbari No. 2 on the other bank, lay a portion of Mouza Matiahattee, while the other portion of the last named Mouza was situate south of Tookra Gohalbari No. 2 up to Koriapukur to the east; Matiahattee though shown in the Mahalwar map of 1857, as within certain limits, seems to have been partly under water at the time of the Revenue Survey. The case map further shows that the river Jamuna flowed between the Mouzas on the east and those on its west bank there and that Matiahatte was the southernmost Mouza; that to the east of Edil Jangalia lay the surveyed Mouza Javariapara or Jarariapara, to its east lay Mouzas Tookra Gohalbari No. 1 and Chuck Jangalia, one after the other, and that to the east of Chuck Jangalia as well as of Mouza Dighulia lay Mouza Soloso Jangalia; Mouza Kowapara or Kowabari was also surveyed at the Revenue Survey and lay east of Javariapara and Tookra Gohalbari No. 2 and to the south of Tookra Gohalbari No. 1 Chuck Jangalia and Soloso Jangalia; Mouza Rajnagar lay, according to the Revenue Survey, east of Dighulia and to the north or north-east of Soloso Jangalia. The plaintiffs assert that portions of Argyola with its Para Mehernagar, portions of Gajansahar Laskarpur with its Para Sonekalsi and portions of Mouza Kathenga with its Para Matiahattee and of Mouza Gohalbari with its Para Maidbari and the entire Mouza Jangalia were in the bed of the river Jamuna, at the time of the Revenue Survey, but were not measured or shown there and the plaintiffs would place the above named Mouzas in the bed of the river between the two banks, and they pointed out to the Commissioner, the bed of the river as at that time as the sites of these Mouzas. Such then was the position of the river Jamuna—a deep and navigable public river—at the time of the Thak and Revenue Surveys. The question arises, whether the lands in dispute which at the time of the Thak and Revenue Surveys were in the bed of this public navigable river formed part of the river bed at the time of the Permanent Settlement. If they were, it is improbable in the highest degree that they should have been settled with a private individual as included in his permanently settled estate. To elucidate the antecedent history of this tract of land, five sets of documents have been produced. The first of these documents is a plan referred to throughout as Rennel's map. This was made by Major Rennel as part of a Survey which was conducted by him between the years 1764 and 1773. The map now under consideration is stated to have been prepared about the year 1781. The map itself does not purport to give the boundaries of different Mouzas nor indeed to define their position with any exactness. It appears that the map was prepared rather for the purpose of showing the roads and the waterways than of locating villages, and consequently the description and definition of the different places is only necessary in relation to the rivers and the roads. The second class of documents consists of quinquennial papers prepared by the Revenue Authorities from 1795 to 1799 under the provisions of Regulation XLVIII of 1793. These contain information as to the lands comprised in revenue paying estates in the District of Mymensingh and were clearly admissible in evidence on the authority of the decision in Shoshi Bhooshun Bose v. Girish Chunder Mitter (3). The third set of papers is described as Hokikat Ohauhaddi Rundi papers which, as pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Haradas Acharjya Chowdhuri v. Secretary of State for India (4), are boundary papers prepared by the owners of the estates and submitted to Government. The precise purpose for which they were prepared in 1821 cannot be ascertained beyond doubt at this distance of time, but this is clear that they were not voluntary. They were made, under Regulation I of 1819 read with Regulation V of 1816, section 7, clauses 5 and 8, on a Government form in pursuance of a Government request and to afford the Government satisfactory information upon the various questions to which they furnish answers inclusive of the names of proprietors the names and boundaries of Mouzas, the local boundaries of Perganas, the number and names of villages and estates, the articles of produce, the rates of rent, the rules and customs established in each Pergana and all like local infromation: the duty to report to the Collector the death of every sadar malguzar and the names of their heirs clearly implies an authority, if not obligation, to keep a record of the names of proprietors in possession. The fourth document is a map prepared in 1831 by Lt. Wilcox. The fifth document is a map prepared for Settlement purposes by one Sambhu Charan Singh in 1845, six years before the Revenue Survey Map of 1851. If now we re-call the fact that the Decennial Settlement made in 1788 was transformed into the Permanent Settlement in 1793, it is manifest that we have materials for a fairly continuous history of the disputed locality for a period of seventy years from 1781 to 1851. The general features of the locality may be visualised with fair approach to accuracy by the help of the two imaginary sketches or hand-sketches which have been drawn up by the parties on the basis of the information derivable from the quinquennial papers and the Hakikat Chauhaddi papers.

In view of the decision of the Judicial Committee in Haradas Acharjya Chowdhuri v. Secretary of State for India (4), which reversed the decision of this Court in Secretary of State for India v. Kalika Prosad (5), there can now be no question as to the propriety of placing reliance upon such hand sketches. The boundaries indicated in the two classes of revenue papers do help the Court to form an idea of the relative situation of the Mouzas and to fix the location of their external boundary, taking them in the aggregate. The circumstance that the Mouzas do not form an absolutely compact block does not necessarily vitiate the method of investigation which met with the approval of the Judicial Committee in Haradas Acharjya Chowdhuri v. Secretary of State for India (4). In the case before us, the Mouzas are sufficiently proximate to justify the application of that method, and we are of opinion that the hand-sketch prepared on behalf of the plaintiffs approximates more closely to the actual relative situation of the Mouzas than the hand-sketch prepared on behalf of the defendant. After examination of Rennel's map, Wilcox's map and Sambhu Charan Singh's map with the help of the hand-sketches prepared on the basis of the information derivable from the quinquennial papers and Hakikat Chauhaddi papers, we have arrived at the conclusion that the inference drawn by the Subordinate Judge is correct. According to Rennel's map, the river Brahmaputra used to flow in its main channel, through what is now known as the District of Mymensingh, and one of its branches—a much smaller stream than the main channel—flowed through the tract, which became subsequently known as the districts of Bogra and Pabna: this branch bore in its upper course the name of Jenai and in the lower or southern portion, the name of Jamuna; another river used at that time to pass through the two districts of Bogra and Pabna, and it had three names in its three different parts; at the extreme north, it was known as the Bangala river, in the middle, as the Ichamati, and in its lower part, the Konai; the Jamuna or the Jenai and the Konai were connected with each other by a small streamlet joining them near a place called Nalthi, but the Jamuna and the Konai were separate rivers and used to flow parallel to each other but at a distance one from the other; the two rivers were about 8 to 10 miles apart. This Konai was not, therefore, a branch of the rivers Brahmaputra at that time. Even if it was a branch of the Brahmaputra, Konai was a separate stream from Jenai or Jamuna, and there is nothing in the record to show that the Jenai or Jamuna was at any time known as Konai; from Wilcox's map, no doubt, it appears that a river which was at the time apparently the main channel of the Brahmaputra, bore the name of Jenai and that it had spread out into two branches, at a spot much above Sarajgunje, and the western of the two branches was known as the Konai; this bifurcation began at a spot much higher up stream, from where the Konai of Rennel's map was connected with the Jamuna and at a considerable distance to the north of the spot where the Hakikat Naksa Konai can be located; besides, Wilcox's river Jenai bore the name of Jamuna at its southern extremity; so Wilcox's Jenai or Konai was not the Konai of Rennel or of the Hakikat Naksas A comparison of the Survey map with the other maps goes to show that the river Jamuna did not flow over the disputed lands at the time of the Permanent Settlement. The map prepared by Sambhu Charan Singh on behalf of the Government shows that the river Jamuna used to flow east of Asli Kowapara and east of the newly formed chur and east of Dighulia; both Dighulia and Kowabari or Kowapara were surveyed at the Revenue Survey when the river Jamuna was flowing west of Dighulia and Kowapara; so the bed of the river Jamuna, at the time of the Revenue Survey in 1852 53 was not its bed in 1845, but the river had moved after 1845 westwards to its position in 1852-53; then we have got Lieutenant Wilcox's map and it shows the river running east of Kowapara and Shahapur and at a distance to the east of Kariapukur; at the time of Sambhu Singh's map, the river had thrown up churs east of Kowapara, and so, it had at that place shifted or shrunk a little towards the east from its position at the time of Wilcox's map of 1830 31. Then, Wilcox's map shows that Argyola lay at a distance to the west of the river, and near a small stream flowing into it; now, according to the Hakikat Naksas of 1820-21, the river Konai ran between Argyola Mehernagar to the east and Purbapara to the west; so it flowed west of Argyola; but the river Jamuna or Jenai of Wilcox flowed to the east of Argyola and at a distance from it, so it did not flow between Argyola to the east and Purbapara to the west, and so the Konai of the Hakikat Naksas did not at the time (1830-31) form part of bed of the river Jamuna or Brahmaputra: the Konai of Hakikat Naksas passed between Argyola and Purbapara but did not pass through or near Kowabari, and so, it could not be the river Jamuna or Jenai of Wilcox's map. Thus, we get it that in 1830 31, the river Jamuna or Brahmaputra or Jenai did not flow over the lands over which it flowed in 1852-53, but passed over lands lying at a distance to their east. Then, from Rennel's map we get it that the river Konai passed near a place called Belkuchi and that the river Jamuna flowed at a distance of 8 or 10 miles to the east; the Mouzas in dispute are much nearer to Belkuchi than to the river Jamuna of Rennel's map, but there is no mention in Rennel's map of any river or waterway over the tract that was covered by the lands now in dispute and lay between these two rivers. At the time of the Revenue Survey, the river Konai of Rennel's map was existing, though as a small stream, and it still passed by Belkuchi, and the Survey Sheet map shows that a small stream or channel connected that Konai with the Jamuna at the time, and that it passed through or near Purbapara Mouza where it joined the Jamuna; the Sheet map also shows that a similar streamlet issuing from the river Jamuna north of Laskarpur, and after passing westwards, took a southerly course, and passed on southwards, past Mouza Kole, leaving it to the east. In the Hakikat hand-sketches filed by the parties, an arm of the river Konai is shown passing west of Kole, and, according to the Hakikat Naksa papers, the river Konai also passed through Laskarpur or between it and Purbapara to the north. The plaintiffs urged that the river Konai of the Hakikat Naksas was a small off-shoot of the Konai of Rennel's map and that the portion of it that had formerly passed between Purbapara and Argyola, had got engulfed in the big current of the river Jamuna after it had moved from east to west from its position in 1830 31 to its bed at the time of the Revenue Survey in 1852-53; they further urged that it was a very small stream and not a deep or navigable river and was part of the property of the owners of the Mouzas on its banks. We are of opinion that this is the correct view to take of the case. There is no mention of any river between the Konai and the Jenai in Rennel's map, and Wilcox's map does not show that the river Jamuna or Brahmaputra used to flow over the lands now in suit, but it ran at a distance to the east; on the other hand, it is clear that the bed of the river at the time of the Revenue Survey, was not its bed in 1845, and that in 1830-31, the river flowed very near its bed of 1845. If there had been any deep or navigable river between the Mouzas claimed by the plaintiffs, mention would certainly have been made in any of the available maps of Rennel, of Wilcox and of Sambhu, but there is not the least reference to any such thing in any of them. Considering these and other matters, we are of opinion that the evidence in the case shows that the lands in dispute were comprised in the Mouzas mentioned in the plaint and the two or three other Mouzas stated above. We may add that the river Konai of Hakikat Naksas, did not pass near or through the southern Mouzas of the said Naksas, and the Mouzas Kathenga, with Para Matiahatte, Gobalbari with Para Majidbari, Mouza Jangalia, Asabpur or Asurpara, Chuck Jangalia, Chuck Gohalbari and Dighulia formed in 1820 21, a compact tract between Bhangabari, Ghote Dhul, Khidder and Chapra to the west and Ranjagar and Soloso Jangalia to the east; in that year no river passed through this tract; even if the river Konai of the Hakikat Naksa were held to be the river Jamuna or any other public river, the portion of the disputed land, lying between these two western and eastern boundaries and forming a compact whole, must have formed part of the Mouzas lying between them, as mentioned in the Hakikat Naksa papers. In fact, it is clear that in 1781 Konai was a small river distinct from the Brahmaputra and several miles distant from it: in 1831 Brahmaputra or Jamuna had moved westwards, and in 1845 had overflowed the lands now in dispute. There is no foundation for the suggestion that the Konai itself was a public navigable river at the time of the Permanent Settlement. In this connection, the observation of the Judicial Committee in Haradas Achar ya Chowdhuri v. Secretary of State for India (4), may be repeated, that there is no copy of the sanad grant at the date of the Permanent Settlement, nor of the kabuliyat nor indeed of any intermediate documents affecting the title, but this is rather the misfortune than the fault of the plaintiffs. Importance also cannot be attached to the areas of the Mouzas as mentioned in the quinquennial papers; there is nothing to show that at the time of the preparation of the papers, there was a public survey according to which the areas of the Mouzas permanently settled had been ascertained. Besides, as was pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Haradas Acharjya Chowdhuri v. Secretary of State for India (4), if, in fact, the boundaries are proved to include an area far greater than that referred to in the returns, such miscalculation or misrepresentation cannot defeat the title to the estate. As the Subordinate Judge has pointed out, the evidence in this case leads to a conclusion which is in conformity with a statement in a well known work of authority (Hunter's Statistical Accounts of Bengal, Volume VIII, page 141): Secretary of State for India v. Shanmugaraya Mudaliar (6), Steamship Dra chenfels, In the matter of the (7). It is stated there that in 1811 that is, about thirty years after the publication of Rennel's map in 1781, the change of course of the river Brahmaputra had begun to be effected. Rennel's map shows that there was no public river just near the lands in suit which lay at a short distance from Belkuchi on or near the river Konai of Rennel's map; Wilcox's map shows that in 1830 31 the river Brahmaputra did not flow over them. The change in the course of the Brahmaputra consequently took place several years after the Permanent Settlement of 1793. This tends to support the plaintiff's case that this tract was dry land at the time of the Permanent Settlement and the lands must consequently have at that time formed part of the Mouzas pointed out by the plaintiffs to the Commissioner even though they may have been in part in the bed of the small rivulet Konai. We accordingly affirm the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the lands in suit were comprised within Mouzas Purbapara, Argyola, Mehernagar, Gajansahar alias Laskarpur with Para Sonekalso, Raneepur, Habbaspur, Kole, Jangalia, Kathenga with Matiahatte, Gohalbari and Majidbari, Asabpur or Asurpara and Chuck Jangalia and Chuck Gohalbari and Digulia, and that the bed of the stream Konai of Hakikat Naksa was part of the Mouzas through which it passed. We also affirm the finding of the Subordinate Judge that Mouzahs Argyola, including its Para Mehernagar, Mouza Purbapara, Mouza Gajansahar known as Laskarpur with its Para Sonekalsi Mouzas Raneepur, Habbaspur, Dighulia and Idil Jangalia appertain in entirety to estate No. 25, and 8 annas of Mouza Kathenga (Kismat) including its Para Matiahatte, surveyed as a Mouza, and a 12 annas of Mouza Kowabari and an 8 annas of Javaria-para are comprised in that estate, and that the remaining 8 annas of Kismat Kathenga including its Para, now, Mouza Matiahatte, the entire Mouzas Kola and Noada, known as Gohalbari, are comprised in estate No. 543 and the remaining four annas of Kowabari to the estate No. 907. The plaintiffs in each suit have got rights to the extent stated in the plaint, in the lands in dispute included in those Mouza. The plaintiffs have got no right to Majidbari and have failed to prove that it is a Para of Gohalbari; they also have been unsuccessful in proving acquisition by adverse possession of any title to any of the lands in suit. It is not necessary to re state the evidence on this part of the case which has been analysed in minute detail with great accuracy by the Subordinate Judge. The summary of the evidence as given by him has been subjected to scrutiny in every particular and has not disclosed any flaw or error. We hold accordingly that the finding of the Subordinate Judge upon the question of title cannot be successfully challenged.

The question of limitation has been argued from a two-fold point of view, namely, first, that the plaintiffs have failed to prove possession or dispossession within twelve years of suit, and, secondly, that the plaintiff in suit No. 10 is not entitled to the benefit of either Article 140 or 144 of the Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act. In our opinion, neither of these contentions is well-founded. As regards the first branch of the argument, it is plain that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge must be upheld upon the authority of the decision of the Judicial Committee in Secretary of State for India v. Krishnamoni Gupta (8), which overruled the case of Kally Churn Sahoo v. Secretary of State for India (9) decided by a Full Bench of this Court in 1881. Lord Davey relied upon the earlier decision of the Judicial Committee in Trustees and Agency Co. v. Short (10) in support of the proposition that on the dispossession of a trespasser by the vis major of the floods, the constructive possession of the land is in the true owner; in other words, the land after submersion becomes derelict, and so long as it remains submerged, no title can be made against the true owner. The Subordinate Judge has correctly held on the evidence that, except as regards a small portion, Chur Bell specified in his judgment, before the defendant could acquire title by adverse possession for the statutory period, the lands both of Chur Sahapur and Chur Bell became submerged in 1877, 1891, and 1901, so as to interrupt the adverse possession and the present suit has been instituted within twelve years from the date of the last emergence. The Subordinate Judge has also correctly applied the test as to the nature of the possession required in an adverse possessor of waste lands sufficient to take the title out of the true owner. Such possession must be, as stated by Lord Robertson in Radhamoni Debi v. Collector of Khulna (11), adequate in continuity, in publicity, and in extent of area to extinguish the title of the rightful owner. See also Jogendra Nath Rai v. Baldeo Das (12). To the same effect is the judgment of Lord Sumner in Basanta Kumar Roy v. Secretary of State (13) where it was pointed out that no rational distinction can be drawn between cases where re-formed land is after a few years again submerged by the flood for a time, and cases where the re flooding is seasonal and occurs for several months in each year. Both these contingencies have, as the Subordinate Judge correctly finds upon the evidence, happened in the present case. Consequently, when the land was re-submerged, whether for a period of years or only for a season, the possession of the Government determined, and while it remained submerged, no adverse possession could be deemed to continue so as to be available towards the ultimate acquisition of title by the Government against the true owner. As regards the second branch of the argument on the question of limitation, it is equally plain that the Subordinate Judge has correctly decided in favour of the plaintiff. The plaintiff in suit No. 10 relies on two circumstances, namely, first, that she is a purchaser from a purchaser at a sale for arrears of revenue, held on the 28th March 1898, and time does not run against her from before the date of the revenue sale; and, secondly, that as her predecessor-in-interest, her mother in-law had an interest for life only, time runs against her only from the date of the termination of such life interest, which took place within twelve years of the institution of the suit. Both these contentions are well-founded. As regards the first contention, reference need be made only to the case of Surja Kanta Achar ya v Sarat Chandra Roy (14) where the Judicial Committee ruled that, in a sale held under Act XI of 1859, what is sold is not the interest of the defaulting owner which is determined on the failure to pay the Government assessment but the interest of the Crown subject to the payment of the Government assessment, and, therefore, the period of limitation for adverse possession against the purchaser at such a sale only commences to run from the date of the sale. See also Bilas Chandra v. Akshay Kumar Das (15). As regards the second contention, it is clear that the plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of Article 140 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act which provides that a suit by a remainder-man or reversioner for possession of immoveable property may be instituted within twelve years from the date when his estate falls into possession. The plaintiff has proved the deed of agreement dated 6th September 1865 between her husband and his adoptive mother, which was construed by this Court in the cases of Dinamoni Chaudhurani v. Elahudad Khan (16) and Dinamoni Chaudhurani v. Elahadut Khan (17). According to its provisions, the mother-in-law of the plaintiff (the adoptive mother of her husband) was to enjoy the properties of her adopted son for life; she was also to enjoy for life such immoveable properties as she might acquire out of the profits of the properties of her adopted son in her possession, and there is no donbt that the mother-in-law of the plaintiff purchased the shares in estates Nos. 26 and 348 out of such profits. Now, the husband of the plaintiff died on the 27th April 1897 and her mother-in law died on the 26th February 1900; the present suit was instituted on the 29th March 1910. It is thus plain that the plaintiff became entitled to possession only after the determination of the limited or particular estate held by her mother-in-law, whatever its precise nature might have been, and that estate did not fall into possession until her death, which, as we have seen, took place within twelve years before the suit. Article 142 cannot apply as the plaintiff was never in fact dispossessed; nor can Article 144 apply, as possession of a trespasser cannot be deemed adverse against a person not entitled to be in possession at that time. There is thus no bar to the application of Article 140, and if that Article applies, as we hold it does, the suit is not time barred. The view we take is in accordance with that adopted by this Court in Promotha Nath Ray Chauahuri v. Dinamani Chaudhurani (18).

The result is, that in each case the decree made by the Subordinate Judge is confirmed and the appeal is dismissed with costs. The cross-appeal is not pressed and is dismissed without costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 90—Execution—Auction sale—Encumbrance not mentioned in proclamation—Auction-purchaser, whether can apply to set aside sale.

SHIVPRASAD v. SANTOOJI.

An auction-purchaser is a person whose interests are affected by a sale within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 90 of the Civil Procedure Code and can, therefore, maintain an application under the rule for setting aside an auction-sale when an encumbrance existing on the property sold has not been mentioned in the sale-proclamation. Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Nimar, in Execution Civil Appeal No. 6 of 1921, dated the 26th July 1921.

Mr. K. K. Gandhe, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. B. Gokhale, for the Non-Applicants.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the auction-purchaser at a sale of a house in execution of a decree for sale in a mortgage suit has applied under Order XXI, rule 90, First Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code, to set aside the sale on the ground that, although the property was encumbered and the Executing Court had ordered the encumbrance to be mentioned in the schedule of the sale-proclamation, the encumbrance was not mentioned in the sale-proclamation.

The first Court held that, as the judgment-debtor had a saleable interest, the auction-purchaser's application did not lie. It made some observations on the merits, but did not really hold any enquiry. The District Judge in disposing of the appeal seems to have considered that the first Court decided the case on the merits and agreed with its decision, overlooking the fact that no proper enquiry had been made into the facts, but he also seems to have agreed with the first Court that an auction-purchaser cannot avail himself of the provisions of Order XXI, rule 90.

The only point that I have to decide is, whether or not an auction-purchaser is a person whose interests are affected by the sale within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 90. The Privy Council ruling in Birj Mohun Thakur v. Rai Uma Nath Chowdhry (1) on old section 311 of 1882 is not applicable since the provisions of the law have now been altered. In Khetro Mohan Datt v. Dilwar (2) the view taken by the lower Courts has been adopted, but no reasons have really been given in the judgment for the view taken. It has been assumed to be axiomatic that every man buys at an auction-sale with his eyes open and the general principle that an auction purchaser cannot attack his own purchase except on the ground provided for in rule 91 that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest, must apply. I prefer the view taken in Bhavirisetti Gopala Krishnayya v. Pakanati Pedda Sanjeeva Reddy (3), in which reasons, which appear to me to be convincing, are given for the opposite view. I will quote the judgment as a whole, as it is short and to my mind very much to the point:—

"The only question to be decided is, whether an auction-purchaser is a person 'whose interests are affected by the sale' within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 90 of the present Code of Civil Procedure. These words did not occur in the Code of 1882 and the question is, therefore, one of first impression so far as auction-purchasers are concerned. Under Order XXI, rule 91 an auction-purchaser may apply to the Court to set aside a sale on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest, but these words do not go far enough to meet the case of auction-purchasers who have been misled by a statement inserted through error or fraud in the proclamation of sale to the effect that the property to be sold is unencumbered.

"There can be no doubt that, if an application is made under Order XXI, rule 92 to set aside a sale, an auction-purchaser is entitled to notice of the application as being a person 'affected' thereby. In this respect, the practice of giving notice to auction purchasers has received the approval of the Privy Council [See Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (4)].

"If an auction purchaser's interests are affected by an order setting aside the sale,

(3) 55 Ind. Cas. 383; 38 M. L. J. 228; 11 L. W. 184; (1920) M. W. N. 152.

(4) 19 C. 683; 19 I. A. 166; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 209; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 898 (P. C.).

it is difficult to see why his interests are not also affected by the sale, although it is true that they are affected in a different sense and in a different degree. In one case, he stands to lose an interest acquired by the sale, in the other, he acquires an interest which he did not possess previously. We have not been shown any reason for confining the word 'interests' in rule 90 to the narrow meaning of interests in existence prior to the sale so as to exclude interests created by the sale.

"In Mahomed Kala Mea v. A. V. Harperink (5) the Privy Council have laid stress upon the duty of Courts to see that in sales held under their direction, nothing is done to mislead purchasers into the belief that properties for which they bid are free from encumbrances, when, if the truth were known, it would appear that they were properties of little or no value on account of their being heavily encumbered. The present is a case in which the respondent was equi ably entitled to have the sale aside as being an unfair bargain into which he was induced to enter by misrepresentation and we think that the Courts below were right in their opinion that the words of the Code are wide enough to provide a remedy for such a case in execution.

"We, therefore, confirm the order appealed against and dismiss the appeal with costs."

I hold that the auction purchaser is a person 'whose interests are affected by the sale' within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 90. I set aside the order of the District Judge and order that the Subordinate Judge should restore the application to his file and dispose of it on its merits according to law. Costs will be costs in the suit.

Per Walsh, J—The word "fraud" dealt with by section 48 (2) (a) of the Civil Procedure Code is such as prevents the execution of a decree within twelve years, and Judges ought to take a broad view of conduct deliberately adopted by judgment-debtors with a view to defeating and delaying the just payment of their debts by frivolous and futile objections, which are dishonest upon the face of them The word "fraud" in this section should no be narrowly interpreted. JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—This is a decree-holder's appeal in an execution matter. On the face of it, it seems not a little startling that a decree originally passed on the 16th of January 1900 and affirmed by this Court in appeal on the 19th of February 1903 should still be under execution, The Court below has held that the decree-holder is now barred, both by the three years' rule of limitation under the Indian Limitation Act, and also by the special provisions of section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Taking these points in order, we do not think the Court below was right regarding the three years period. The application now before us was made on the 12th of May 1920, and it was well within three years of a previous application which had been disposed of in the year 1918. The Court below has got round this difficulty by a process of reasoning based upon the fate of a previous application of the year 1915. For reasons which we need not enter into, the record is seriously defective; but in a general way we may accept the fact that in the year 1915 there was a decision by the Execution Court to the effect that the execution of the decree was then time-barred. What we do not know is, whether this decision proceeded with reference to the three years' rule, or the twelve years' rule laid down in section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The same question of limitation was raised again in the year 1918 and was then decided in favour of the decree-holder. That decision may have been a bad one. It is possible that if the judgment-debtors had contested it in appeal, there might have been a decision in their favour on the ground that the decision of the year 1915 could not be reconsidered or set aside. As the case now stands, the later of the two decisions in respect of which either party can plead the principle of res judicota, is in favour of the decree-holder. The grounds, therefore, upon which the Court below has applied the three years' rule of limitation, cannot be sustained.

The question regarding the application of section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure is a more difficult one. The fact is, that until the month of July 1907 the decree-holders were being held up by a subsequent litigation, in which it was finally decided that their decree could not be executed against one set of defendants who were minors at the time it was passed. This does not affect the validity of the present execution, but merely serves as a partial explanation of the long delay which has affected those proceedings. When the decree-holder took out execution in the year 1908, an objection was raised on behalf of the brothers of one of the present respondents, that is, the party against whom the decree was admittedly capable of execution, which led to further litigation, and after a decision in this Court in favour of the decree-holder on the question of limitation, to a compromise under which a substantial portion of the decree was realised. Since then the judgment-debtors have obstructed the execution of the decree in various ways; even in connection with this present application they seem to have avoided service of the notice and to have succeeded with difficulty in obtaining a re-hearing in the Court below after an ex parte order had been passed against them. Taking a broad view of the evidence, we think that the principles affirmed by this Court in cases like those reported in Beni Prasad v. Kashi Nath (1) and Meena Lal v. Ahmad Ali (2) are applicable. We hold that execution of this decree has been obstructed by fraud on the part of the judgment-debtors to a sufficient extent to entitle the decree holders to the further opportunity sought by them under this present application. We, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the order of the Court below and send the case back to that Court with directions to proceed with the execution according to law. The decree-holder-appellant will be entitled to the costs in this matter in both Courts including, in this Court, fees on the higher scale.

WALSH, J.—I agree. I propose to add a few words upon the question of fraud dealt with by the learned Judge. It is clear to my mind that he has taken much too narrow a view of his function. He says that the mere filing of frivolous objections was not a fraud as it did not prevent execution, and that the fraud must be such as to prevent execution. This is a clear misdirection and a total misunderstanding of the section. The "fraud" dealt with by the section is such as prevents the execution of the decree within twelve years, and, to my mind, Judges ought to take a broad view of conduct deliberately adopted by judgment-debtors with a view to defeating and delaying the just payment of their debts by frivolous and futile objections which are dishonest upon the face of them. It is the duty of a Court, and if a Court of law does not perform the duty nobody will ever perform it, to preserve a strict standard of moral conduct. Fraud is merely moral turpitude, and if Judges set a low standard of moral conduct by their decisions in Court, it naturally follows that a low view is taken by the profession, and by the public, and the only way to preserve a standard of conduct for the public in matters of litigation is for the Courts to set a strict and proper standard themselves. The word "fraud" in this section should not be narrowly interpreted. Nobody can doubt that the object of its insertion in this section was to prevent the tricks which are constantly played by judgment-debtors, and I propose to cite two or three simple illustrations of the meaning of "fraud" because nobody can say in anticipation exactly what conduct would in a particular case amount to fraud or the kind of conduct which has always been held to be fraudulent.

Mr. Justice Maule in Evans v. Edmonds (3) said as follows:—"I conceive if a man having no knowledge whatever of a subject takes upon himself to represent a certain state of facts to exist, he does so at his peril, and if it be done either with a view to secure some benefit to himself or to deceive a third person, he is...guilty of fraud."

Mr. Justice Watkin Williams in Joliffe v. Baker (4) said:—"Ever since 1845 it has been clear and established law that...the term 'fraud' must be used and understood in the common meaning of the word as it is ordinarily used in the English language and as implying some base conduct and moral turpitude."

Lord Justice Cotton in Derry v. Peek (5), quoted at page 360 in 14 Appeal Cases, said:—"What, in my opinion, is a correct statement of the law is this, that where a man makes a statement to be acted upon by others which is false and which is known by him to be false or is made by him recklessly or without care whether it is true or false, that is" fraud.

This principle ought to be strictly applied in execution cases just as in any ordinary suit for decision.

The agreement was reduced to writing and signed by them all and filed in Court on the 10th January 1921. On the same day the Court passed an order referring the matter to the five panchas and fixed the 10th February 1921 for the filing of the award in Court. The order-sheet of the 10th February 1921 runs as follows :—

"Plaintiff by Mr. Kekre, Pleader. Defendant by Mr. Umesh Dutt. They now say that Mr. Gopal Rao should be the sole arbitrator. They must file an application to the effect. The case will then be referred to Mr. Gopal Rao and he will be requested to submit his award within a fortnight. For 28th February 1921.

"Application filed and order of reference is made over to Mr. Gopal Rao, Pleader."

The application is to the following effect :—

"It is submitted that in the above suit four panchas have been appointed for the decision of the suit. We do not desire a decision by those panchas. Now we both parties agree to accept whatever decision

KASHIRAM v. GUDDOO.

Pandit Gopal Rao Sahib, Vakil, alone will give in this case."

It is signed only by the two Pleaders for the parties, namely, Messrs. Kekre and Umesh Dutt Patka.

On the 29th March 1921 Mr. Gopal Rao's award was filed in Court and the 8th April 1921 was fixed for filing objections. On the 7th April 1921 defendants Nos. 3 and 4 filed an application in which they urged that only one panch out of the five appointed had decided the case against them in their absence and set forth certain objections to the award. They said that the award was not acceptable to them and they desired that the Court should proceed with the case. The application is signed by a new Pleader, Mr. Dharnidhar. On the 8th April 1921 defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were examined in Court and they also stated that they never agreed that the case should be referred to one arbitrator and that the award was not binding on them. They alleged that they never instructed Mr. Patak to refer the case to one arbitrator. The plaintiff's Pleader made the following statement :—

"The reference to Mr. Gopal Rao was made on the joint application of the parties. Mr. Umesh Dutt had appeared for all the defendants and had signed the petition. The order is thus binding on all the defendants.* * * * * * Mr. Gopal Rao had asked the defendants to produce evidence. But they did not do anything. The plaintiff learns that the defendants had gone to Mr Gopal Rao. Thus, there are no good grounds to set aside the award."

The order-sheet of the same date shows that Mr. Umesh Dutt Patak was present at the hearing but was neither examined by the Court nor made any statement himself as to whether he was instructed to make the application on their behalf. The following issues were fixed by the Court :—

Whether the defendants had through Mr. Umesh Dutt agreed to refer the matter to the sole arbitration of Gopal Rao ;

Whether Mr. Umesh Dutt had no power to refer the matter to arbitration on behalf of the defendants ;

Whether Mr. Gopal Rao had decided in the absence of the defendants after giving them notice ;

Whether the award can be set aside on any of these grounds.

The lower Court writes :—

"I find that, though there was no express authority to Mr. Umesh Dutt, he was fully within his power to refer the matter to the sole arbitrator. The parties had not suggested to Mr. Umesh Dutt to refer the matter to the single arbitrator. No express authority was required for such a purpose. I find that Mr. Umesh Dutt had power to refer the matter as he was placed in charge of the case. * * * Mr. Gopal Rao, Pleader, who gave the award has been examined. I find from his statement that he had given verbal notice to the parties and they failed to appear before him. They did not adduce any evidence. He had thus to depend upon the evidence found on the record of this case. No case is made out for setting aside the award."

It is unnecessary to decide, for the purposes of this case, whether a Pleader has power, in the absence of express authority to that effect, to refer his client's case to arbitration. In my opinion where, as here, a litigant has himself appointed the arbitrators his Pleader has no power to substitute another or others in their place or to revoke the appointment of one or more of them without the knowledge of or instructions from his client. Power to make an appointment in the first instance in the absence of any instructions to the contrary is one thing and power to undo the appointment made by his client is another thing. In this view the cancellation of the appointment of the five punchas by the Court based as it is upon the Pleader's request is unwarranted and invalid and the subsequent appointment of Mr. Gopal Rao must also be held to be such. It is not suggested in this Court that the defendants in any way acquiesced in the appointment of Mr. Gopal Rao. So far as the record goes, it shows that they did not recognise his appointment or take part in the proceedings before him. I set aside the reference to Mr. Gopal Rao and all proceedings subsequent to it. The Court will proceed to deal with the case as it stood before the 6th February 1921. Parties will bear their own costs in this Court.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 85—"Mutual, open and current" account—Test—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115 (c)—Revision—Decision based on non-existent facts—Material irregularity.

The test of an account being mutual, open and current within the meaning of Article 85 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act is the intention of the parties; the fact that the balance has always been in favour of the same party would not prevent the account from being mutual, open and current.

If the decision of a case is based not merely on a forced and impossible construction of the facts that were before the Court, but on the importation of facts which were admitted by both the parties not to exist, there is clearly a material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction of the sort contemplated by clause (c) of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

ORDER.—The decision of this case is based, not merely on a forced and impossible construction of the facts that were before the Court, but on the importation of facts which were admitted by both parties not to exist. This is clearly a material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction of the sort contemplated by clause (c) of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. The defendant was employed as the Munim of the plaintiffs on a monthly salary. This was not paid to him every month but he was allowed to draw what he required from time to time, the amounts so drawn being debited against the amounts due to him as salary. His salary was entered on the credit side of the accounts at the end of each year and not of every month and the balance due by him was carried forward to his debit in the following year. He was shown as having overdrawn at the end of every year, though in some years the sums he drew amounted to less than his salary for that year. The learned Additional District Judge has treated this account as closed at the end of each year, the balance of the credits and debits during that year only, if it was against the defendant, becoming some sort of 'debt' differing from the sort it was till that moment and apart entirely from the accounts of previous or the following year. It was held that "at the end of each year the 'amount of balance' became debt due to plaintiffs from the defendant."

It is impossible to find any justification for taking a year as the period at the end of which this somewhat occult process took place. If it took place at all, it would surely be at the end of each month. And why should it take place in regard to the balance now found to be due as the result of the debits and credits of each year separately? The parties never closed the account at the end of each year and put it aside, so to speak, and opened an entirely new account for the next year, as the learned Judge has done. They carried the debit of each year forward into the next. The balances shown in the books, for the writing of which the defendant himself was responsible, are the result of the debits and credits for the whole period from the beginning of his service, which shows that the parties at least never regarded the balance of the debits and credits of each separate year as undergoing any change of character at the end of that year. It may be remarked also that no interest was ever charged against the defendant on the amounts overdrawn.

In all these circumstances, I find it difficult to imagine an account more completely filling the description in Article 85 of the Limitation Act, "mutual, open and current." The fact that the balance was always in fact in favour of the same party does not prevent the account from being mutual. The test is the intention of the parties, and indeed it is quite probable that there were times at which the balance stood in favour of the defendant, though the accounts were never made up at any such time. The plaintiffs were, therefore, entitled to sue within three years of the last day of Sambat 1976, which was 20th March 1920, for the balance due to them on the whole account from the beginning. The plaint puts the accrual of the cause of action on 25th September 1919 when the defendant left the plaintiffs' service, which is apparently correct, but the three years' period of limitation does not run from that date. This, however, does not matter, as the suit was filed on 17th July 1920.

It was found in the first Court and not denied in appeal, not is it denied here, that the amount due by the defendant to the plaintiffs, provided no part of the claim was barred by the law of limitation, was Rs. 353-11-6 on 25th September 1919 plus interest at 1 per cent. per mensem from that date. The amount due as interest from that date to this is, therefore, Rs. 103-9-6, giving a total of Rs. 457-5-0. Interest clearly ought to run on this sum at the same rate until the defendant pays it. The decrees of the lower Courts are, therefore, set aside. In lieu of them, decree will issue ordering the defendant to pay to the plaintiffs the sum of Rs. 457-5-0 together with interest thereon at 1 per cent. per mensem from this date to the date of payment and all the costs incurred by the plaintiffs in both the lower Courts and in these proceedings. The Pleader's fee in this Court will be Rs. 15.

Landlord and tenant—Occupancy holding—Transfer—Recognition by landlord—Knowledge—Burden of proof—Patwari, authority of—Acquiescence—Construction of document—Operative part—Recitals—Zerait, meaning of, in Bihar—Forgery—Test—Conveyancing—Corporeal and incorporeal hereditaments.

Per Dawson Miller, C. J.—The receipt of rent by a landlord from the transferee of a holding, not transferable by custom, validates the transfer. But the Gomastha or Patwari of the landlord, although authorised to collect rents on his behalf, has no authority by taking rent from a transferee to create the relationship of landlord and tenant between his master and the transferee. In such cases the landlord would not generally be bound unless he accepted the rent knowing the source from which it came. [p. 909, col]

In such cases it must be shown that the landlord had knowledge of the transaction and ratified it either expressly or by implication. [p 910, col .]

If a Court is satisfied upon the natural construction of the operative part of a deed that a certain property passes notwithstanding that the construction may be difficult, the recitals have no binding force. [p. 908, col. 2: p. 909, col. 1.]

In Bihar the term zerait is used to denote all lands in direct cultivation of indigo planters for cultivation of indigo as distinguished from cultivation of indigo by raiyats. The factory may hold the land as proprietor, tenure-holder raiyat, or under-raiyat and whatever the interest may be the land is still called zerait. The word used in this sense has no connection with the term zerait as used in the Bengal Tenancy Act and meaning proprietor's private lands. [p. 911, cols. 1 & .]

Per Das, J.—An assertion by a tenant does not establish a case of recognition. It must be established that such an assertion was made to the knowledge of the landlord and that the landlord acquiesced in the assertion deliberately and with knowledge as to its effect [p 932, col 1.]

Parties cannot be said to acquiesce in the claims of others unless they are fully cognizant of their right to dispute them, and where acquiescence is relied on, it must be shown that the person acquiescing was aware of the matter in which he acquiesced, and of the effect of such acquiescence. Recognition, like waiver, must be an intentional act with knowledge. [p 925, col. 2.]

The fact that the transferee of an occupancy holding pays the rent as such transferee does not decide the question that the transferee has been recognised by the landlord as his tenant. he must establish that the landlord accepted rent from him as a tenant. In other words, it is the act of the landlord that decides the question, and not the act of the person who claims the status of tenant [p 926, col. 2.]

Where the circumstances are equally consistent both with the case of the tenant who sets up recognition and with the case of the landlord who denies it, the tenant, on whom the onus of proof as to recognition lies, must fail. [p. 934, col. 2.]

It is not within the scope of the authority of a Patwari or a rent collector to consent on behalf of his master to the transfer of an occupancy holding. That is an important act to be performed only by a person having some at least of the powers of a manager. [p 930, cols. 1 & 2.]

A person who has conveyed his proprietary interest to another person but whose name is still borne on the Collector's register, cannot, by giving a rent receipt, recognise a person as having a right of occupancy in the land, who otherwise had no such right. [p. 931, col. 2; p 932, col. 1.]

It is quite true that the recitals in a conveyance are subordinate to the operative part and that, consequently, where the operative part is clear, it is treated as expressing the intention of the parties, and it prevails over any suggestion of a contrary intention afforded by the recitals: but it is well-established that where the operative part is doubtful and it is impossible to say, on a mere reading of it, to which properties it refers, then the recitals can and ought to be used to explain its meaning; and that while, for the purpose of construing the operative part, the whole of the instrument may be referred to, yet the recitals leading up to it are more likely to furnish the key to its true construction than the subsidiary clauses of the deed. For instance, parcels of a deed described with certainty are not cut down by recitals showing that something less was intended to pass; but the recitals assist the construction of the operative part where there is an ambiguity in the operative part as to the property affected. [p. 922, cols. 1 & 2.]

An occupancy holding forms a property by itself and is capable of being held and is in fact held distinct and apart from the estate, within the ambit of which it may happen to lie. [p. 925, col. 1.]

The old modes of conveyancing under which an estate accompanied by possession passed by livery, while future estates and other rights in land passed by grant, gave a practical rule for distinguishing between corporeal and incorporeal hereditaments. The old conveyancing test is now obsolete: but the distinction is still maintained, and such rights as are not accompanied by exclusive possession are classed amongst incorporeal hereditaments whereas those rights which entitle the owner to the present possession of the land or to receipt of rent and profit are classed as corporeal hereditaments It is quite true that a right of occupancy, looked at from the point of view of right of property and not subject of property, is incorporeal in its nature; but the actual possession of the land, to which a person having a right of occupancy is entitled, attracts it to the class of corporeal hereditaments. [p. 922, col. 2; p. 923, col. 1.]

It is dangerous to come to a conclusion on the question of forgery on a mere comparison of the writing in a disputed document with the writings in admitted documents. [p. 921, col. 1.]

One of the most useful tests in considering a case of forgery is to see whether a clear dissimilarity of habit can be traced through the documents tendered If there exists such a dissimilarity, then it is difficult to say that the same person wrote them all The judicial mind has constantly taken advantage of the characteristic peculiarities of individuals when a question has been raised whether their writings have been forged, such peculiarities being most commonly manifested in the formation of an idea or in the mode of spelling particular words. [p. 921, col. 2; p. 922, col. 1.]

Per Adami, J.—A recognition by a landlord to be effective in favour of a tenant must be clear and certain. [p. 939, col. 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the decision of Mr. Justice Mullick, differing in opinion with Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad, in Appeal from Original Decree No. 97 of 191 , dated the 8th August 192 .

FACTS appear from the following dissenting judgments of Mr. Justice Mullick and Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad, dated the 18th August 1920.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—The plaintiff is the owner of estate No. 9507 in the District of Muzaffarpur and sues for the recovery of an area of 36 bighas 7 cottas and 11 dhurs and for mesne profits from the cold weather of 1321 F S. (1913) till the date of the suit, namely, the 5th December 1914 and thereafter till delivery of possession. The principal defendant, Mr. Vincent, resists the suit on the ground that, by virtue of a ticca lease executed by the plaintiff's predecessor in favour of his predecessor, Mr. Hasson, he was in possession of that part of Mauza Etwarpur Jainti which falls within the plaintiff's estate No. 9507 and that on the expiry of the lease, which occurred on the 1st Kartik 1321, corresponding to the 5th October 1914, he surrendered possession of all the lands except the area in suit in which the predecessor of his lessor had acquired the interest of an occupancy raiyat by purchase from the former tenants and by recognition by the landlord.

The chain of transactions by which the plaintiff derives his proprietary title is as follows:—

Mauza Etwarpur Jainti was a village situated in a permanently settled estate held in common tenancy by a number of proprietors up to the year 1868. It is alleged that, for the sake of convenience, the lands or some of them were privately partitioned among the proprietors of whom Sunder Sahay was one. In 1868 there was a Collectorate partition by which Sunder Sahay was allotted a separate estate No. 9507 in proportion to his 8 annas share. After Sunder Sahay's death his estate devolved upon one Matuk Lal who, on the 13th July 1895, executed a conveyance of sale in favour of the plaintiff and his co-sharers, Juggu Lal and others. It is admitted that by a partition in 1909 the lands in suit were allotted to the plaintiff.

The chain of transactions by which the defendant claims title is as follaws:—

It is alleged that one Nathu Lal Chaudhury had an indigo concern and that in the year 1271 F. S, corresponding to 1863 64, he purchased from five tenants named Bulaki, Doma, Bhikari, Bhikan and Adam Danuk, portions of their occupancy holdings measuring an aggregate area of 36 bighas 7 cottas and 11 dhurs and that the purchase was recognised by Sunder Sahay by a letter dated the 19th December 1865. On the 30th June 1876, Nathu Lal obtained from Sheo Prasad, the successor of Sunder Sahay, a lease of a 2 annas share of Mauza Etwarpur Jainti, for a period of seven years from 1284 to 1290 F. S. That lease was renewed on the 25th July 1883 for a further period of 9 years, viz., from 1291 to 1299 F. S. The remaining 6 annas share of Sunder Sahay in Etwarpur Jainti No. 9507 was leased on the 20th November 1881, by Matuk Lal, the successor of Sheo Prasad, to Nathu for a term of seven years from the year 1289-1295. For the years 1300 to 1302 the 2 annas share was held under an amaldastak or oral settlement by Nathu Lal and the 6 annas share, the lease for which expired in 1295 was held from 1295 till 1302 by an oral settlement of the same kind. On the 23rd July 1890 Nathu Lal sold the entire indigo concern, which was then styled the Pirakpur Indigo Factory, to Mr. Henry William Hudson, who remained in possession till the leases above-mentioned expired in 1302, i. e., till October 1895. During the years 1303-1304 F. S., corresponding to 1895-96 and 1896-97, the Factory was not in possession under any lease. According to the defendant, Matuk Lal collected the rent for this period but on the 19th April 1897 Mr. Hamilton Hudson, on behalf of the proprietors Mr. Henry Wilson Hudson and Mr. Henry Hudson, executed a kabuliyat in favour of the plaintiff and his co sharers for the 8 annas share of Etwarpur Jainti for a term of seven years from the years 1305 1311 F. S. That kabuliyat was renewed in 1904 for a term of 9 years from 1313-1321 F. S. by Mr. W. Hudson on behalf of Mr. H W. Hudson in favour of the plaintiff and his co-sharers.

Mr. H. W. Hudson was upon his death succeeded by his sons, Mr. H. W. Hudson and Mr. Percy Hudson and after the death of the former Mr. P. Hudson was the sole proprietor of the Factory in 1909. In that year the defendant, Mr. Vincent, who had joined the factory in 1903 as Manager, purchased a 4 annas share from Mr. Hudson and in 1912 after the death of Mr. P. Hudson he purchased the remaining share from his widow Mrs. Hudson.

The defendant's case is that he did not purchase the occupancy holding in suit by his conveyance from Mr. Hudson, and that on the 13th January 1914 Mrs. Hudson executed a sub lease in his favour in respect of this land by which he became an under-raiyat for a period of 9 years with an option of successive renewals at an annual rental of Rs. 5.

The case of the defendant, therefore, is that up to 1881 Nathu Lal Chaudhury was an occupancy raiyat of this land at a rental of Rs. 197 14 0 inclusive of road cess, and that after he acquired the ticca lease of Etwarpur Jainti he continued to hold as an occupancy raiyat during the period of his ticca; that from 1890 to 1895 Mr. Hudson continued in possession under the same right and title; that if there was any defect in the title of Mr. Hudson by reason of there not being any custom allowing the transfer of occupancy rights that defect was cured in the year 1303, i. e., 1896, by the receipt of rent in respect of the holding by Matuk Lal the then proprietor; that in the year 1896-97 and in subsequent years Mr. Hudson and his successors continued to retain their occupancy right during the period of their ticca lease, and that on the 1st Kartik 1321, corresponding to the 5th October 1913, the plaintiff was entitled to recover possession only of the ticca lands and not of the land in suit.

The Subordinate Judge framed five issues in the suit. The second issue related to the title of the defendant, the third to his recognition by the proprietor in 1896, and the fifth to the question whether occupancy rights were transferable by custom in the locality. He did not consider it necessary to determine this last issue but he found issues Nos. 2 and 3 in the defendant's favour and he, therefore, dismissed the action. The plaintiff accordingly appeals.

In my opinion the crucial question in the case is, whether the defendant's predecessor was recognised as an occupancy raiyat by the proprietor on the 16th April 1895, and I will first of all deal with the relations between the parties during the years 1895-96 and 1897-98, corresponding to 1302 and 1304 F. S.

The two documents which bear upon this part of the case are Exhibits I and K. Exhibit I is a receipt for a sum of Rs. 138 alleged to have been paid by the Factory to Matuk Lal, the proprietor, on account of the rent of an occupancy holding of 36 bighas 7 cottas and 11 dhurs. The receipt is dated the 18th Baisakh 1303, corresponding to 16th April 1896, and purports to have been given by Khub Lal, Patwari, nephew of Dwarka Lal, Patwari. The rent of the holding is entered as Rs. 191-14-6, the road-cess at Rs. 5-15-6 and the total demand at Rs. 197-14-0. The plaintiff characterises this document as a forgery, but the learned Subordinate Judge, after carefully considering the evidence, has found that it is genuine and I fully agree with him. The plaintiff asserts in his evidence that Khub Lal was never a Patwari in 1303, but there is evidence to the contrary which the learned Subordinate Judge appears to have believed. Attention has been drawn to the fact that Khub Lal has signed as the nephew of Dwarka Lal, Patwari. This matter does not seem to have been made a subject of attack in the lower Court but one possible explanation may be that Dwarka Lal and Khub Lal were both Patwaris, of whom Dwarka Lal was the senior. That Khub Lal had authority to receive the money is not only established by the evidence for the defendant but may also be inferred from the admission made by the learned Vakil for the plaintiff that a sum of Rs. 138 was received by Matuk Lal from the tenants as rent. It is suggested that Khub Lal had no authority to bind the landlord so as to recognise the transfer of the holding but that is a question of fact and I find no trace in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge that any such objection was taken before him. If a receipt is given to a tenant by a man who ordinarily collects rent and who is the landlord's Patwari the onus is thrown upon the landlord to show that the Patwari had no authority to accept the rent, for the relations between him and his Patwari must be a matter within his special knowledge.

Then, it is said that there was no recognition in law. To this, again, the answer is that the objection does not seem to have been taken before the Subordinate Judge. The case made before him was that Matuk Lal did receive the sum of Rs. 138, but that it was money collected by his Patwari, Ram Golam, from tenants occupying certain milkiat lands, and not from the lands in suit which are seriat lands. The sole question before the learned Subordinate Judge seems to have been whether the money was paid by the Factory or not. It seems to have been assumed that, if the defendants' contention was accepted, then recognition would be inferred as a matter of course. The execution of the receipt is proved by Bootan Misser, who has been 25 years in the service of the Factory and who de-poses that it was written and signed in his presence, and I cannot see why the learned Subordinate Judge's finding as to the due execution and genuineness of the document should be impugned

The document is supported by another document which was prepared the following year, viz., Exhibit K. This is a wasilbaki prepared between the 1st and 5th April 1897 of which the heading runs as follows:—

"Wasilbaki account settled in the presence of the tenants of Mauza Etwarpur Patti of Babu Matuk Lal Sahu, present purchasers (torn) Lall Chaudhury, Sudhan Lal Chaudhry, Dhonu Lal Chaudhury and Bhonu Lal Chaudhury for the year 13 4 F. when it was held in direct possession." The case of the defendants is that Biseswar Lal, the mohurir of the Factory, prepared this document in the presence of the tenants and of the agent of Matuk Lal in order that an account might be made showing the total amount to be collected from the raiyats of Etwarpur Jainti for the years 1303 and 1304 as well as the amount already collected and the balance due. It will be remembered that the last lease of the Hudsons' had expired in 1302 and for the years 1303 and 1304 the proprietors were entitled to collect the rent. It will also be remembered that Matuk Lal executed a deed of sale in favour of the plaintiffs' family on the 13th July 1895. Therefore, in the ordinary course, the plaintiffs' family would have been entitled to collect the rents for the years 1303 and 1304; but the evidence shows that the purchasers did not complete the purchase till the 29th August 1896, and the learned Subordinate Judge is, in my opinion, right in holding that for the year 1303 by reason of some arrangement between the vendor and the vendee, Matuk Lal must be regarded as the de facto proprietor. But then it is said that title passed as soon as the conveyance was executed and so Matuk Lal had no authority to receive the money. No such argument was advanced before the learned Subordinate Judge and, in any event, the defendant is entitled to reply that as regards the tenants, Matuk Lal who was the registered proprietor was the only person competent under section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to give a valid discharge for the payment of rent. He was, therefore, the person who had authority to recognise the Factory as the tenants of the disputed land. It seems that all that he realised was the sum of Rs. 138 and that a sum of Rs. 1,012 remained outstanding for the two years, 1303 and 1304. Meanwhile, negotiations were going on between the Factory and Matuk Lal for a renewal of the lease, and on the 19th April 1897, Mr. Hamilton Hudson executed a kabuliyat in favour of Juggu Lal for a period of seven years from 1305 to 1311 F. S. The document, Exhibit K, shows that seven of the tenants signed the wasilbaki under their own hands while the remaining tenants, with the exception of thirteen, signed by the pen of others. The balance outstanding against the tenants, viz., a sum of Rs. 1,012 inclusive of an arrear of Rs. 257-12 0 due from the defendant, was by arrangement paid by the defendant to the new purchasers at the time of the execution of the kabuliyat and upon the back of the document, Exhibit K, there is an endorsement in pencil by Mr. Hamilton Hudson in his own handwriting dated 8th April 1897 which runs a follows:—"Bal. 1,150 to pay, demand Rs. 1,012." It appears that the arrangement with the Factory and the incoming and outgoing proprietors was that Matuk Lal was to keep the money which he had collected and that the Factory was to pay the balance due from the tenants to the new purchasers and that the Factory should in its turn reimburse itself by collecting the amount from the tenants. The plaintiff characterises Exhibit K as an absolute forgery. He denies that any such document was drawn up. In particular, he takes exception to the entry against serial No. 142 which states that the proprietor of the Pirakpur Indigo Concern is "kashtkar" in respect of a holding of 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs at a rental of Rs. 197-14 0 and that a sum of Rs. 138 has been received from it leaving a balance of Rs. 257-12 0 due from it. In my opinion, there cannot be the slightest doubt as to the genuineness of this document. The endorsement in blue pencil on the back of it, dated the 8th April 1897, is clearly genuine and there is no reason whatsoever for disbelieving Mr. Hudson when he states that he made this note showing the amount which it was agreed the Factory should pay, before the new lease was executed. If this document is accepted as representing the true state of facts there cannot be the slightest doubt that in 1897, only 11 days before the lease was renewed by the plaintiff's family, the Factory was claiming the land in suit as its occupancy holding. Both Exhibits I and K came from the custody of the defendants and Mr. Vincent has sworn that in April 1913 when the plaintiff had signified his refusal to renew the lease he caused a search to be made in the Almirahs where the old papers were kept and found these two documents.

The plaintiff seeks to explain the collection of the sum of Rs. 138 by Matuk Lal by a document marked Exhibit 7 which is a receipt dated 29th July 1896 granted by Matuk Lal to Jaggu Lal Chaudhury an adjustment of accounts in respect of the rents of Mauza Eswarpur Jainti for the year 1303. It is said that the purchasers agreed to pay to Matuk Lal for that year the sum of Rs. 520 as the rent which he was entitled to collect from the tenants and that as he had realised from the tenants a sum of Rs 138 the balance of Rs. 382 was paid by the purchasers to him. In support of Exhibit 7 the plaintiff has tendered Exhibit 8 which is a Siha account for 1303 showing from what tenants the sum of Rs. 138 was collected and Exhibits 9 and 10 which are two Revenue Chalans. It is contended that Ram Gulam, Patwari, the man who collected the rent, remitted the balance to Matuk Lal after paying into the Government Treasury the amounts due upon these two Chalans. The learned Subordinate Judge was, in my opinion, right in declining to accept the plaintiff's version of the arrangement with Matuk Lal. The collections entered in the Siha are not proved by the Patwari though he appears to be alive. Then, again, it is not clear why Rs. 520 should be the annual rental when, according to the lease which had just expired, Matuk Lal was entitled to collect from the Factory only the sum of Rs 500 per annum. The learned Vakil for the appellant explains that the additional sum of Rs. 20 represents the rent chargeable upon the holding of Haji Ghous Mia which had been excluded from the rent roll of the Factory by arrangement with the lessors. There is, however, no evidence to this effect. Then, again, it is said that for the years 1303 and 1304 there was a verbal lease given by the plaintiff's family to the Factory at an annual rental of Rs. 575 and that while the plaintiff was paying for the year 1303 to Matuk Lal the sum of Rs. 520 he realised from the defendant the sum of Rs. 575 for that year. In my opinion the learned Subordinate Judge was justified in rejecting these allegations. In my opinion the weight of evidence is clearly in favour of the defendants and establishes that the payment of Rs. 138 was made as part payment of the rent of the holding of 36 bighas 7 cottas and 11 dhurs.

But then it is contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the conduct of the Hudsons' and the admissions made in the kabuliyat of the 19th April 1897 are inconsistent with this finding. It is necessary, therefore, to consider the document, Exhibit 1.

In this document the lessees, through Mr. Hamilton Hudson, admit that 36 bighas 7 cottahs 11 dhurs of zerait land lie in Mauza Etwarpur Jainti Tauzi No. 9507 and they agree they will give up possession of this land on the expiry of the lease and that they will have no right of occupancy therein. It is extraordinary that, having on the 16th April 1896 paid Rs. 138 as rent for an occupancy holding in the estate and having on the 8th April 1897 made an endorsement on the back of wasilbaki in which the rental and the area of the holding were clearly entered, Mr. Hamilton Hudson should, on the 19th April 1897, have agreed that the lessees would claim no occupancy rights on the expiry of the lease. Mr. Manuk on behalf of the defendants has contended that the clause renouncing occupancy rights refers to lands other than the lands in suit but, in my opinion, having regard to the schedule which gives the serial numbers of the plots and their areas, it is impossible to believe that the lessees did not intend to refer to the suit lands. From Mr. Hudson's evidence it would seem that he desires to throw the blame upon Kumar Lall who, he says, was the Factory Munshi and was responsible for settling the terms and drawing up the deed. He also suggests that he was himself inexperienced and did not understand the Persian language and that he did not realise the full meaning and importance of the admission. The Munshi in question was subsequently dismissed but nevertheless, there can be no question that the kabuliyat must be held binding on the defendant until the contrary can be shown. With regard to the payment of Rs. 138 it is strange that Mr. Hundson was asked no questions at all ; the reason for this omission may be that he joined the Factory in 1897 and was not aware either of the payment or of the Factory's rights over the 36 bighas 7 cottahs and 11 dhurs. As he signed at the back of the wasilbaki he ought to have been aware of the entries in the body of the document but it is suggested by Mr. Manuk that the document being in the vernacular he had no knowledge of its contents. Indeed, this is his general explanation of the conduct of the European officials of the Factory. That may be the truth, but it is unfortunate and incomprehensible that no effort was made either by the parties or the Trial Court to clear up the obscurity. The European witnesses are all men of character and position and would, I feel certain, have told us the truth as to whether in 1897 or 1904 the existence of this occupancy right was known to them, and, if so, how they came to admit the land to be zerait.

Realising the difficulty of his position Mr. Manuk attempts to escape from the admission in the following way. His first submission is, that under section 120 of the Bengal Tenancy Act any admission made by a raiyat after the 21st March 1883 cannot be used against him in a suit where the landlord seeks to prove that the land is zerait. The authority in support of this proposition is Sukan Sao v. Karu Mahton (1) and, in my opinion, notwithstanding the earlier cases to the contrary decided by the High Court of Calcutta, it is binding upon this Court. But the learned Vakil for the plaintiff contends that in this case the landlord is not claiming the land as zerait within the meaning of section 120 of the Bengal Tenancy Act ; that he is claiming the land as part of the mal lands of his Zemindary ; that the burden of proving a tenancy lies on the defendant and that, therefore, an admission of fact by the defendant that he has not acquired any occupancy rights in this land is relevant against him although a stipulation that he will not acquire occupancy rights in the future would be illegal. The learned Subordinate Judge appears to have accepted this view and, in my opinion, he was right. The plaintiff, notwithstanding his attempt at the trial to show that the lands were zerait in the strict sense, in which no occupancy rights could ordinarily accrue, would still be entitled to succeed if they were merely raiyati lands now in the possession of the "malik" and if the defendant could show no right of tenancy therein. The defendant having given a complete history of the origin of the holding and the plaintiff being unable to deny that the holding consists of the holdings of Bhikari, Dema, Bulaki, Bhikan and Adam the plaintiff has thought fit to set up the case that the land is zerait, but that ought to be no reason for excluding the recital in the kabuliyat. The real question is not whether the lands are the proprietor's sir or private lands in the strict sense of the word but whether the plaintiff is entitled to resume them as a part of his Zamindary. I hold, therefore, that the wiser course was adopted by the Subordinate Judge in allowing the admissions to go in for what they were worth. If, upon a consideration of all the evidence, it is found that the admissions are incorrect or inconclusive or inoperative, I think the defendant is entitled to a decree.

In my opinion the first point to be noticed about the admissions in the kabuliyat of 1897 is that, while the document recites that 36 bighas 7 cottahs 11 dhurs are zerait and that at the end of the term of the ticca the ticcadars will claim no occupancy right in any land, it refers by implication to a tenancy held by the ticcadars. I refer to the passage in which the lessees agree to pay to the lessor a sum of Rs. 1,012 as representing the arrears due for 1304 from the tenants and undertake to realise this sum from the tenants and from themselves. If it was not intended that the lessees should pay something to the proprietors as rent the use of the words "I the ticcadar will get the same from the tenants of the village and from my own Tahsil" seem unintelligible. One explanation is that the lessees did not know their own rights and that they did not understand that an occupancy right once acquired could be relinquished except by surrender or abandonment. Another explanation is, that they knew their rights but intended to ignore the law. In the absence of evidence upon the point, it is impossible to speculate; all one can say is that the document itself shows that the tenancy was recognised in 1303.

In this connection it is material to consider the entries in the Survey and Settlement Record which was published on the 29th June 1896. In that document the lands in suit were described as bakasht malik but not zerait. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff that if, on the 16th April 1895, the proprietors of the Factory had been recognised as occupancy raiyats they surely would have taken steps to contest the entry in the Record of Rights. There is some force in this contention, but one explanation is that the defendants were expecting to get a renewal of the leases and it was to their interest not to raise the question of their permanent rights, it being always open to them to rebut the presumption in a suit. Another explanation is that they were careless. A third explanation is that the entry must have been made some years before the final publication of the record and at that time the Factory had not been recognised by the proprietor as the successor of Nathu Lal Chaudhury. Mr. Richardson in his evidence states that while the Survey proceedings were going on the Factory did not exercise any efficient supervision. It is strange that this should have been so but there is evidence that the management was extremely lax and that the Hudsons were guilty of the most culpable negligence. I do not credit them with a cunning intention to deceive the lessors, i.e., with that of obtaining the leases by making admissions which they knew would not be valid and operative in law. I do not think that either Mr. Hamilton Hudson or Mr. Ross said to themselves "we will make whatever admissions the lessors like but when the leases are determined we will set up our true rights as occupancy rights." The learned Subordinate Judge has taken into account the admissions in the leases executed by both these gentlemen and also the Record of Rights and has come to the conclusion that they were inoperative and could not extinguish the occupancy right of the defendant which was recognized in 1896. With this finding I fully agree.

It is a curious circumstance that plaintiff's account of the collection of the Rs. 138 by Matuk Lal from his tenants is not supported by a single raiyat's evidence. A raiyat called Basant Lal was in Court but was not called to support the document. Another curious feature is that the exact area of 36 bighas 7 cottahs and 11 dhurs which comes down from 1865 in the defendant's documents should appear for the first time in the plaintiff's lease of 1897. If such a holding had never been heard of and if its existence had not been discussed or recognised, from where did the plaintiffs get this area The Survey and Settlement Record makes no mention of it. It shows the area of the bakasht lands to be 34 bighas and some odd cottahs and the probability is that the area was supplied by the defendant and that the defendant did claim that he had some kind of tenant right in the land.

Holding, therefore, that the defendant has established his case as to payment of rent in the year 1896, the next question is what rights did he acquire thereunder.

This makes it necessary to go back to the origin of the tenancy.

The earliest document disclosing the origin of the tenancy is the jamabandi (Exhibit H) of 12 81, corresponding to 1863 and 1864. This was a document prepared by Dwarka Lal, the Patwari, and is proved by his grand nephew Baldeo Lal. It is a Zemindary paper showing the collections made by Sunder Sahay and has been produced from the custody of Baldeo Lal. Next Exhibit H1, is a similar jamabandi for 1273. These two documents show that five tenants, named Bulaki, Doma, Bikhan, Bikhari and Adam, sold either portions or the whole of their occupancy holdings to Nathu Lal Chaudhury, aggregating a total area of 36 bighas 7 cottahs 11 dhurs and carrying a rental of Rs. 197 14 0. Exhibits H2 and H3 the jamabandis for 1277 and 1281 corroborate the sale. Of the five tenants Bikari and Bulaki are the only two who are alive; they are very old men now and have given evidence in support of the purchase and the creation of Nathu Lal's holding,

Prayag Lal, who was the Munshi of the Factory for 8 or 9 years at or about that time, also gives corroborative evidence upon this point and so does Ram Charitra, witness No 3, who was the cousin of Sunder Sahay. Finally, Tilak Chaudhury a cultivator aged 75 deposes that he knows the 36 bighas of kasht land which were purchased by Nathu Lal Chaudhury and that in consideration for the sale to him of 21 bighas of thatching grass by Mr. Grant, the then Manager of the Factory, he did some digging work for the Factory on the 36 bighas in or about 1877. All this evidence obtains striking corrobration from Exhibit 22 which is the measurement khasra of the Collector's partition proceedings dated the 4th December 1865. That partition was made upon an application by Sunder Sahay and a separate estate corresponding to his 8-annas share was thereby created. Items Nos. 34 and 39 on this khasra show that Doma Sahay was then in possession of an area of 9 cottahs 15 dhurs. A reference to Exhibits H1 and H2 shows that this is the exact area which remained in Doma Sahay's possession after he had sold part of his holding to Nathu Lal. So, again, is this striking coincidence found in regard to Bulaki Lal. Exhibit 22 also shows that there was at that time an Indigo Factory in the village and that it held land in the village which was described in some places as "Indigo zeriat of the Factory" and in others as "Indigo zerait" only. The evidence shows that Nathu Lal had been carrying on the cultivation of Indigo under leases from Sunder Sahay's co-sharers of lands in their exclusive possession. Whether the sales by the five tenants above-mentioned were recognised by all the landlords is not clear but there is a letter, Exhibit E, dated the 15th December 1866, written by Sunder Sahay to Nathu Lal in which Sunder Sahay recognises Nathu Lal as the cultivator of 36 bighas 7 cottahs and 11 dhurs of khudkasht lands (occupancy holding) at an annual rental of Rs. 197.14.0 which had fallen within his proprietary interest and had been purchased by Nathu Lal from the tenants of the village. If this letter is genuine, it would seem that there had been some private arrangement by which the land fell within Sunder Sahay's patti and that he was the sole landlord.

The learned Vakil for the appellant has characterised this document as an audacious forgery. The document is in Persian, on a paper bearing an old impressed stamp of 1865, and carrying a Stamp Vendor's endorsement on the back of it in accordance with the rules in force at that time. The appellant asks us to compare Sunder Sahay's signature on this document with Sunder Sahay's admitted signatures in Exhibit 4, which is a mokarrari patta, dated the 22nd July 1867, Exhibit 14A, a mukhtarnama in the partition proceedings, dated the 22nd July 1868, Exhibit 14, a mukhtarnama in the same proceeding, dated the 17th May 1871 and Exhibit O, a petition in the partition proceedings, dated the 21st January 1868. The learned Subordinate Judge, after a careful comparison of the writings, came to the conclusion that while the signatures in the latter documents were in small writing Exhibit E was written in a flowing Persian style and in large letters and that there was nothing to show that it was not signed by Sunder Sahay as alleged. No expert testimony has been given in the case and I, for myself, am unable to say by a comparison of the writings that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong. A witness called Ezid Baksh has been examined on behalf of the plaintiff to show that he knew Sunder Sahay's writing and that Exhibit E was not signed by him. The cross-examination of this witness shows that, if he knew Sunder Sahay at all, he must have been so young then that his evidence is of very little value. On the other hand, the appearance of the document, the condition of the paper, the fact that if the document had been a recent forgery the ink would certainly have soaked in and run, satisfy me that no forgery has been committed. It seems incredible that if the defendant had intended to support his case with a false document he would have produced a signature so utterly dissimilar to the admitted signatures.

Our attention has been drawn to the fact that the document states that the rental should be inclusive of road cess. It is said that in 1865 there was no Government demand known as road-cess which did not become leviable till 1871. It does appear to be the case that the first Road Cess Act was passed in 1871 and that the first Public Works Cess Act was passed in 1877; but Mr. Manuk urges that the probability is that for some years before 1871, the proposal to levy road-cess was being widely discussed and that the intention of Government to legislate for this purpose was known to Sunder Sahay. The evidence does not show that there was not before 1871 any provision enabling a Zemindar to realize a cess for the upkeep of roads, and the materials upon which a charge of forgery can be based are wanting. It is curious that the document speaks of the "Road-Cess to be levied by the Government in the future." This seems to support Mr. Manuk's suggestion but, however that may be, I am not prepared to hold that the document is a forgery. It is inconceivable that an European of the education of Mr. Vincent would have made so stupid a blunder, if he was embarking on forgery, as to make mention of an impost which was neither in existence at the time nor contemplated.

The genuineness of Exhibit E is further established by Exhibit D which is a list of documents prepared by Nathu Lal or his agents in 1872. This is a very old and worm-eaten paper purporting to be a list of pattas forwarded to Nathu Lal by his Manager, Mr. Exshaw. Entry No. 27 in this list shows that there was a document dated the 19th December 1875 in the possession of the Factory acknowledging the purchase by the Factory of 36 bighas 7 cottahs 11 dhurs of kasht land from the tenants of Etwarpur. The appellants answer to this is that this document, too, is a forgery. Now Mr. Exshaw is either dead or cannot be found but his signature has been proved by Prayag Datta, the old Munshi, who is 85 years of age. I do not think there can be the slightest doubt that Exhibit E was prepared in 1865 and entered in Mr. Exshaw's list in 1872.

I cannot agree that Exhibits E, H, H1, H2, H3, and 22 have been forged. In my opinion they are genuine document which establish the origin of Nathu Lal's title in the suit lands.

It is necessary here to say a word about Exhibit N-1, dated the 21st April 1891, and Exhibit N, dated the 18th December 1892. These documents purport to be rent receipts given by Matuk Lal's agents to the Hudsons for the lands in suit and for other lands. The particular importance of Exhibit N lies in the fact that it purports to be a receipt for kasht lands in addition to other lands. The writer of the documents is a Mukhtar, named Rudra Prashad. He was called by the defendant but in the witness box he said that the words "main kasht" (including kasht) are interpolations. The learned Subordinate Judge accepted both documents as genuine but Mr. Manuk has declared before us that he will not rely on them as the appearance of the disputed part of Exhibit N is suspicious and that he prefers to base his case on the other evidence adduced by him. Rudra Prasad was evidently disbelieved by the Subordinate Judge and it seems to me that Mr. Manuk had no need to give up Exhibits N, and N-1. But I agree that he can afford to do so and that there is ample evidence to show that Nathu Lal did purchase 36 bighas 7 cottahs 11 dhurs and that his occupancy right therein was recognised by the proprietor.

The suggestion of the learned Vakil for the appellant that in or about 1865 Nathu Lal, on the strength of leases held under proprietors other than Sunder Sahay forcibly dispossessed the raiyats in Sunder Sahay's patti and so acquired the 36 bighas is not supported by any reliable evidence.

The plaintiff in regard to this part of the case relies on three Road Cess Returns filed by the Factory. The first two are Exhibits 13 and 13-A and were filed by Beni Prasad, Am Mukhtear to Mr. Henry Hudson, on the 27th October 1902. In these Mr. Hudson admits that an area of 36 bighas 7 cottahs 11 dhurs is nij jote land in his possession and that its annual value is Rs. 392-2. He does not show himself as a cultivating raiyat paying rent to himself as ticcadar. Exhibit 11 is a similar document filed by Iswar Lal Patwari on 19th November 1912. That document, too, shows that the Factory holds an area of 36 bighas 7 cottahs 11 dhurs as serait.

These declarations, in so far as they are admissions, must be taken into account against the defendant, but the explanation seems to be that they were, if at all incorrect, made under an excusable error. Raiyati land coming into the khas possession of the proprietor would ordinarily be shown as serait land, and I am by no means certain that the entry in this case was wrong. If it was wrong the error, in my opinion, was an excusable one.

I am satisfied, therefore, that the allegation that Nathu Lall purchased the lands in suit is correct.

The next question is, whether the raiyati holding thus created in 1865 merged in the proprietary right when Nathu Lal took his first lease from the proprietors on the 13th June 1876. In my opinion it did not; firstly, because he was an ijaradar, and, secondly, because he was not an ijaradar of the whole estate. The law previous to 1885 on this point was the same as that contained in section 22 of the present Bengal Tenancy Act and Nathu Lal's occupancy right did not merge in the proprietary right under Act X of 1859 [See Maseyk v. Bhagabati Barmanya (2)]. It follows, therefore, that in 1881 when Nathu Lal acquired the ijara of the whole Mauza his occupancy holding was still alive.

The next question is, whether Nathu Lal did in fact sell this holding to the Hudsons by his conveyance dated the 23rd July 1890 (Exhibit 12).

The learned Vakil for the appellant contends that the conveyance did not pass the occupancy holding. In the alternative it is contended that if it did, then, in the absence of evidence as to the saleability of occupancy rights, no title passed to Hudson.

It is true that the deed does not specifically mention the occupancy holding in question, but, having regard to the general words used in the document and the schedule of ticcadari villages, I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that though the touzi number has been incorrectly given, the lands in suit were transferred as part of the 8-annas share of Mauza Etwarpur Jainti and were covered by Item No. 37 of the list. Indeed, before the learned Subordinate Judge there was no denial that the Hudsons did in fact purchase whatever right, title and interest Nathu Lal Chaudhury had in the suit lands. In the list of kasht lands attached to the schedule the only entry is one relating to 4 bighas 7 cottas held under a proprietor named Biteshwar Singh. What the meaning of this entry is has not been disclosed. This list certainly cannot be an exhaustive statement of all the kasht lands held by the Factory for we know from the Survey Records that there were other raiyati lands of which the Factory was in possession under proprietors other than Matuk Lal.

Upon his view of the facts it did not become necessary for the Subordinate Judge to decide the issue whether occupancy rights are saleable by custom in the locality. The defendant did give evidence upon this point and, having regard to the conduct of Sunder Sahay and Matuk Lal in recognising the transfer to Nathu Lal and Mr. Hudson respectively, I would, if it had been necessary, have held that the custom had been established.

Having now cleared the position as regards the existence of an occupancy right in the lands in 1865, I propose to examine the legal rights of the defendant. The learned Vakil for the appellant contends that as there is no evidence that Nathu Lal paid rent for the holding it must be presumed that the occupancy right ceased to exist and he relies upon section 6 of Act X of 1859 which prescribes that an occupancy raiyat shall be entitled to possession so long as he pays rent. The reply is that the actual payment of rent was not necessary under that Act. Payment of rent entitled the raiyat to possession, but it does not follow that the occupancy right was terminated as soon as the rent fell into arrears. It was necessary that the landlord should determine the tenancy before the tenant could be divested of his status [See Narain Roy v. Opnit Misser (3)].

It may be as well to consider here the alternative argument advanced by Mr. Manuk as to the status of Nathu Lal previous to 1873. He contends that, even if it be held not to have been established that Nathu Lal acquired an occupancy holding by purchase and by subsequent recognition by Sunder Sahay, he acquired such a right by 12 years' possession between 1863 and 1875, in which year he took a "ticca" of part of the village. Mr. Mitter's reply to this is that Act VIII of 1885 is not retrospective and that under Act X of 1859 possession without payment of rent does not confer a right of occupancy. In my opinion payment of rent must be presumed and, therefore, under section 6 of Act X of 1859 Nathu Lal must have acquired an occupancy right.

(2) 18 C. 121; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 81.

(3) 11 C. L. R. 417; 9 C. 304; 5 Shome L. R. 133; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 852.

From 1876 to 1881 in which year Nathu Lal acquired the lease of the whole village and then down to 1890 the occupancy right was held in suspense. It is not necessary in this view to consider what would have been the position in 1881 if there had been no ijara. But if it were necessary to decide the point I would hold that the law of merger does not apply to the Mufassil in Bengal and that the view taken in Thomas Sait v. Punchanun Roy (4), Lal Bahadoor Singh v. E. Solano (5), Hirendra Nath Dutt v. Hari Mohan Ghose (6), correctly represents the law of this province. Therefore, whether Nathu Lal commenced his tenancy as a tenant-at will or non-occupancy raiyat or occupancy raiyat he was, in my opinion, in 1881 an occupancy raiyat and from 1881 to 1890 his occupation of Mirza Etwarpur Jainti as 16 annas ijaradar did not put an end to his occupancy right.

What, then, was the position when Nathu Lal sold to Hudson on the 23rd July 1890? Assuming still that there is no custom of transfer of occupancy holdings, Hudson became a trespasser but his recognition in 1896 legalised his position as the successor-in-interest of Nathu Lal. In my opinion it was a recognition of the occupancy right, and there is no suggestion that any new tenancy was created.

That being so, let us now examine the effect of the admissions made by the Hudsons in the leases Exhibit 1, dated the 19th April 1897 and Exhibit 2, dated the 8th September 1904.

I have already held that the admissions are relevant on the footing that the lands belong to the raiyati stock of the country and that though the plaintiff cannot give any information as to their previous occupation by any raiyat he is entitled to succeed unless the defendant can prove a tenancy from which he is not liable to be ejected.

Now, whether the admissions were foolish, fraudulent or induced by mistake, the fact remains that Act VIII of 1885 prescribes that a tenant cannot divest himself of occupancy right by contract.

This is admitted by Mr. Mitter but he argues that the deeds indicate that it was the intention of Mr. Hudson to relinquish or surrender or abandon his occupancy right and that the agreement to restore 36 bighas odd to the khas possession of the landlord after the indigo crop had been cut was legally sufficient to terminate the tenancy with effect from the 19th April 1897.

In my opinion the case of relinquishment, surrender or abandonment should have been specifically raised and pleaded; no such case appears to have been made before the Subordinate Judge and there is no finding of fact upon which the legal application of sections 85 and 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act can be founded. I am not prepared in the Appeal Court to go into a question which is a mixed question of law and fact and upon which the learned Subordinate Judge was not asked to come to a finding.

Mr. Mitter next urges that Mrs. Hudson's sub-lease to Mr. Vincent practically amounts to a permanent lease at a fixed annual rental of Rs. 5 and that this being contrary to the provisions of section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 the landlord is entitled to eject the defendant. Mr. Vincent has not produced the sale-deeds by which in 1909 and 1912 he purchased the right, title and interest of the Hudsons, but he produced Exhibit A the sub-lease dated the 30th January 1914, that is to say, his ticca lease had expired, in which Mrs. Hudson states that she did not sell her occupancy rights in the lands in suit to Vincent; and that there was an agreement at the time of the sale that in consideration of the purchase-money paid for the sale she would give Vincent a sub lease of all the lands appertaining to the Indigo Concern in which she had a right of occupancy and that, in accordance with the said agreement, she has executed a sub lease for a term of five years at a rent of Rs. 5 per annum with an option to the lessee of successive renewals.

BHONG LAL CHAUDHURI v. VINCENT.

It is contended upon the authority of Bipin Behari v. Amrita Lal Bhattacharji (7) that this practically amounts to a permanent sub-lease and that the transaction is invalid. I agree with Mr. Manuk that the law has been correctly laid down in Abdul Karim v. Abdul Rahman (8) and that the lease is neither illegal nor invalid: it binds the occupancy raiyat and the under raiyat and, so long as the rent of the holding is duly paid and the land duly cultivated, I cannot see under what provision of law the superior landlord is entitled to re-enter. Mr. Mitter argues that Mrs. Hudson by living in England and by discontinuing the cultivation of the holding by herself or her servants must be taken to have abandoned within the meaning of section 87, but here again we have a mixed question of law and fact upon which it is impossible to come to a decision for the first time in the Appeal Court. Speaking for myself, I see nothing in the evidence which would justify the view that there was an abandonment. I do not, however, agree with Mr. Manuk when he says that the landlord cannot, except by following the procedure laid down in section 87, obtain relief against abandonment. If he can prove abandonment in fact and in law he would be entitled to succeed without resource to the special procedure of the Tenancy Act.

The result, however, is that I find that the occupancy right of Mrs. Hudson still subsists and that the defendant Vincent had a valid title to occupy the land as her under-raiyat.

Finally, let us consider what would be the position if it be held that Matuk Lal did not recognise Hudson as the purchaser of the occupancy right of Nathu Lal Chaudhuri but merely as a tenant for the year 1303. In that case, although it is nobody's case that a new tenancy was created, the status of Hudson would be that of a non-occupancy raiyat and the question is whether that status could be extinguished by the acquisition of the ticca in 1897. Being of opinion that the Law of Merger does not apply to the Mofussil, I think the non-occupancy right would continue to exist though suspended. This view is in accordance with the recent decision of this Court in Pierpont Morgan v. Ramjee Ram (9). On the expiry of the ticca lease in 1913 Mrs. Hudson's non-occupancy right would still be alive and it is not competent to the plaintiff to eject her without resort to the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

In my opinion, therefore, the suit has been rightly dismissed, but I cannot conclude my judgment without some reference to the conduct of the defendant and his predecessors.

Though it is impossible to speculate as to the state of Mr. Hamilton Hudson's knowledge it would seem that the existence of the tenancy was known to some at least of his subordinates. I think it is probable that Mr. Hamilton Hudson was entirely in the hands of his servants and that he was ignorant of the affairs of the Zamindary. I do not believe that he intentionally deceived the proprietor by an assurance that the occupancy right was surrendered. It has not been disclosed who drew up this lease. It is said that a man named Kumar Munshi was responsible for it and that he knew the facts and that he has been dismissed by the Factory.

Nor did Mr. Ross act with any greater care in 1904. Whether he knew anything about the occupancy holding is not disclosed. He says that the leases had been settled by Mr. Henry Hudson who was his predecessor and a proprietor and he suggests that he did not concern himself with the statements contained in the document. This gentleman was in charge of the Factory for nearly four years and he cannot plead the excuse of youth like Mr. Hamilton Hudson, and it is unfortunate that he was not questioned more fully as to the state of his knowledge.

Mr. Vincent who purchased a part of the proprietor's share in 1909 and the remainder in 1912 and who had become a manager in 1909 also does not say when he first became aware of the occupancy right, but from the recital in the sub-lease executed by Mrs. Hudson on the 30th January 1914 it would seem that he certainly knew of it in 1912. Upon the proprietor's refusing to renew the lease in 1913 he asserted his right to occupy the 36 bighas 7 cottahs 11 dhurs as a tenant. There can be no doubt that it was then that Singharan Rai produced the important document Exhibits D, E, F and K from the Factory almirah. Possibly, Mrs. Hudson may have had doubts about her capacity to successfully assert her title as an occupancy raiyat and it may be that for this reason she in her sub-lease stipulated that Mr. Vincent would indemnify her against all liabilities incurred in the assertion thereof. But Vincent's attitude in the matter has been perfectly correct and if, notwithstanding the conduct of the Hudsons, he can establish his raiyati title, he is fully entitled to take advantage of the protection which the law allows.

Finally, there is a letter written by Mr. Richardson, marked Exhibit X, dated the 15th June 1885. Mr. Richardson was in the position of a supervisor to the younger Hudsons who were managing the Factory. He lived at a distance but appears to have been consulted in all serious matters. It will be remembered that in 1885 negotiations were going on for the renewal which eventually resulted in the lease of 1887. Mr. Richardson in the letter in question writes to the proprietor that he will agree to the exclusion from the lease of 2 bighas of zerait land. It is contended that Mr. Richardson admits thereby that there were zerait lands at that time. The use of that term, however, is not inconsistent with the existence of an occupancy holding within the demised area. Indeed, the Survey operations which were going on about this time show that the Survey Authorities were not satisfied that the area in suit was true zerait.

But the significance of Mr. Richardson's conduct lies in his failure to assert the occupancy right either before the proprietors or the Survey Authorities. Mr. Richardson, as in the case of the other European witnesses, has not been asked whether he knew of the existence of any such right. If he did, there is a very good explanation for his not disputing the Survey entry. For when the entry was made the Hudsons had not yet been recognised as raiyats and if the saleability of occupancy rights was doubtful their position was that of trespassers.

The position became different in 1887, but in my opinion the admissions made by the Hudsons then could not in law operate to divest them of their occupancy right. The case really turns upon the recognition of 1886 and I do not think that the learned subordinate Judge's estimate of the evidence bearing upon this point has been shown to be incorrect.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit in ejectment, and relates to 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs of land situate in Mauza Etwarpur Jainti. The predecessor-in interest of the plaintiff, Sunder Sahay, had 8 annas share in the Mauza. By Collectorate partition in December 1878, Sunder Sahay was allotted a separate estate bearing touzi No. 9507 representing his 8 annas share. The lands in suit have fallen into this Touzi of Sunder Sahay and he thus became proprietor of 16 annas of the lands.

After his death, his estate devolved upon one Manik Lal, who on the 13th July 1895 executed a conveyance of sale in favour of the plaintiff and his co-sharers defendants third party (1 to 11).

On the 23rd June 1909 by amicable partition the lands in suit were allotted to the plaintiff. The plaintiff is thus the 16 annas proprietor of the lands in suit.

One Nathu Lal established an Indigo Concern called Binkipur Factory in the year 1271 (1863-64). On the 30th June 1876 (Jaith 1283), he obtained a lease of 2 annas out of 8 annas share of Mauza Etwarpur Jainti, per Exhibit 23, from Shiu Prasad, successor of Sunder Sahay, for a period of seven years from 1284 to 1290.

The lease was renewed on the 28th July 1883, per Exhibit 19, for a further period of 9 years from 1291 to 1299 (1884 to 1892). The remaining six annas share of Sunder Sahay was also leased to Nathu Lal on the 20th November 1881 for a term of seven years from 1289 to 1295 (1882 to 1888). Nathu Lal continued to hold the lease of the entire 8-annas under an oral settlement up to 1302 (1895).

In the meantime, on the 23rd July 1890 (1297), Nathu Lal sold the entire Indigo

BHONU LAL CHAUDHURI v. VINCENT.

Concern, then styled Pirakhpur Indigo Factory, to Mr. Henry William Hudson, who thus came to be in possession of the entire 8 annas share of Sunder Sahay in Mauza Etwarpur Jainti, touzi No. 9507, as a lessee thereof admittedly till 1302 when the oral lease is said to have expired. There was an interregnum during the years 1303 and 1304, corresponding to 1895-1896 and 1896-97. There is a dispute about this period.

The plaintiff's case is that Mr. H. W. Hudson held over and continued to be in possession as a lessee. The defendant's case is that Manik Lal collected the rent for this period.

On the 19th April 1897, Mr. Hamilton Hudson, Manager of the Factory, executed a kabala (Exhibit 1) on behalf of the proprietors, Mr. William Hudson and Mr. Henry Hudson, in favour of the plaintiff and his co-sharers for the entire 8-annas share of Etwarpur Jainti for a term of seven years from 1305 to 1312 (1898-1905). The kabuliyat (Exhibit 2) was renewed in 1904, for a term of 9 years from 1311 to 1321 Fasli by Mr. H. W. Hudson in favour of the plaintiff and his co sharers.

Mr. H. W. Hudson was succeeded by his sons Mr. H. W. Hudson and Mr. Percy Hudson, who after the death of the former in 1909 became the sole proprietor. Mr. Vincent, defendant No. 1, became Manager of the Factory in 1908 purchased 4-annas share from Mr. Hudson and in 1912, after the death of Mr. P. Hudson, he purchased the remaining share from his widow Mrs. Hudson. The defendant No. 1, Mr. Vincent, is, therefore, the proprietor of the 16-annas Factory from 1912. After the expiry of the last lease of Mauza Etwarpur Jainti, on 1st Kartick 1321 (5th October 1913), the plaintiff recovered khas possession of the Mauza, touzi No. 9507, but he did not get possession of the disputed lands in that Mauza and hence he has brought the present suit for recovery of the same with mesne profits.

The defendants first party and the fourth party only appear in the suit. The defendant first party, Mr. Vincent, resists the claim of the plaintiff to the khas possession of the land in suit on the ground that the disputed land was the occupancy holding of Nathu Lal Chaudhri, the former proprietor of Pirakhpur Factory, at an annual rental of Rs. 197 14-0; that after he acquired the ticca lease of the entire 8-annas share of Etwarpur Jainti, he continued to hold the land as an occupancy raiyat during the period of his ticca, and after he transferred the Factory in 1890 to Mr. H. W. Hudson, he and his successors continued to be in possession in the same right and title, and that now Mrs. Hudson, the defendant fourth party No. 12, is in possession of the same as an occupancy holder, and she on the 13th January 1914 executed a sub-lease in favour of defendant No. 1, Mr. Vincent, whereby the latter became an under-raiyat for a period of 9 years up to 1923 with an option of successive renewals at an annual rental of Rs. 5.

The defendant No. 1, therefore, contends that he is in possession of the lands in suit as a sub-lessee of the occupancy holder, Mrs. Hudson, and that the plaintiff on the expiry of the ticca lease of the village is not entitled to get khas possession of the same.

The vital question for consideration in this case is whether the disputed land formed the kashtkari land of Mr. Henry Hudson and Mrs. Hudson. The plaintiff is the proprietor of 13 annas of touzi No. 9507 in which the lands in suit are situate. The defendant and his predecessor have been lessees of a part of the village from a long time (from 1876) and from 1881 of the entire village. The lease ultimately terminated on the 5th October 1913 and the plaintiff is prima facie entitled to eject the defendants from the land in suit.

The defendants can resist the claim of the plaintiff for khas possession only on establishing their kasht rights in the lands as claimed by them. The Subordinate Judge has rightly held that the onus of proof lies upon defendants and he is certainly supported by the authorities quoted by him: Dina Nath Das v. Ganesh Chandra Saha (10), Ambica Prasad Singh v. Baldeo Lal (11) and Narsing Narain Singh v. Dharam Thakur (12).

BHONU LAL CHAUDHURI v. VINCENT.

The defendants' case is, that the land in suit was acquired by Nathu Lal Choudhury, the original owner of the Pirakhpur Factory by purchase from tenants in the year 1271 (1863-1864) before he became a lessee of the village, and the jamabandis Exhibits H, H-1, H 2 and H 3 of 1271 (1864), 1273 (1866), 1277 (1870) and 1281 (1874), respectively show that Nathu Lal acquired some tenants' land amounting to 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs, at a rental of Rs. 133 odd which subsequently from the year 1273 was enhanced to Rs. 197 odd. In order to corroborate these jamabandis, reliance has been placed upon the batwara khasras, Exhibits 21 and 22, of 1868. But the rental mentioned therein is much less than that shown in the jamabandis of 1870 and 1874 (Exhibits H2 and H3). The rental mentioned in the batwara is at the rate of Rs. 3 per bigha, which would approximately correspond with that mentioned in the jamabandi, Exhibit H1, of 1864 prior to the batwara.

The defendants, however, rely upon the letter, Exhibit E, dated the 19th December 1865, said to have been written by Sunder Sahay to Babu Nathu Lal Choudhury. In that it is said that the writer Sunder Sahay recognised him as a cultivator of 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs kabza kasht of tenants purchased by him, with an annual rental of Rs. 197-14-0, including rent and road-cess to be levied by Government in future. The document is in Urdu and is written on a paper bearing an old impressed stamp of 1865. The appellant challenges the genuineness of this document and relies upon Exhibits 4, 14 (a) and O in order to show that the admitted signatures of Sunder Sahay on this document are different from that on Exhibit E. I have carefully compared the signature of Sunder Sahay on all these documents and have not the least hesitation in holding that the disputed signature on Exhibit E is widely different from his admitted signatures on the other documents referred to above. The style is different and each letter in Exhibit E differs in mode and style from the corresponding letters on the other documents. The Subordinate Judge has disposed of it by saying that the signature on Exhibit E is much larger than on the other document and that the expression "bakalam khud" in Exhibit E, instead of "bakalam khas" on the other documents may be due to his not being acquainted with the proper idiom "bakalam khas." But all the other documents are more or less contemporaneous. Exhibit 4 is dated the 22nd July 1867; Exhibit 14 (a) is dated 22nd July 1868, and Exhibit O is dated 21st January 1868. It is not likely that he would in one document sign as "khud" and in all the others as "khas." The Exhibit E is written in a flowing Urdu style and the language employed is idiomatic, showing that the writer was not so ignorant as the learned Subordinate Judge supposes him to be. To my mind, the Subordinate Judge did not carefully compare the signature. The words "Sunder Sahay" and "bakalam" are quite different in Exhibit E and the other documents. The letter "kha" of the word "khas" in the other documents is quite dissimilar from the same letter in the word "khud" in Exhibit E. In fact, none of the letters in the other documents resemble with those in Exhibit E, either in the body or in the signature portion of Exhibit E.

Exhibit 4 is a registered mokarrari patta. It bears three signatures of Sunder Sahay, one as an executant and the others taken before the Sub-Registrar. The signatures thereon are admittedly the genuine signatures of Sunder Sahay.

Exhibit O is a petition in the partition proceedings and is relied upon by the defendants. I, therefore, have no hesitation in accepting the evidence of plaintiff's witness No. 8, Fazl Baksh. He used to reside in the house of Sunder Sahay where his father was employed as a Moulvi. He had, therefore, occasions to know the signature of Sunder Sahay. He denies that the writing or the signature on Exhibit E is that of Sunder Sahay.

Admittedly, the first Public Works Cess Act had not come into operation until 1877, i. e., 12 years after the document was written in 1865. Hence the words "Road-Cess" included in the jama of Rs. 197 show that the forgery was overdone. The writer forgot at the time that no road-cess was then leviable and the explanation offered by Mr. Manuk that the levy of cess might have been in contemplation and Sunder Sahay anticipating it wrote the words in the document in question, would be highly extraordinary and improbable. The writing in Exhibit E, which is an earlier document than others, is more pokhta (finished) than that in the other documents. It is also strange why Exhibit E was written on a stamp paper. A letter of this kind is never written on such paper. The letter in question is sought to be corroborated by Exhibit D, a list of documents said to have been prepared by Nathu Lal Choudhury or his agent in 1872. This document is said to be a list of pattas. It is sought to be proved by Prayag Dutta, a witness examined on commission on behalf of the defendants. He says that the Factory was first started in Rauna in 1272 and was transferred to Pirakhpur in 1274, owing to flood, by Babu Nathu Lal Choudhury. He says that the rental was enhanced over the original rents paid by the tenants thus to explain the rental of Rs. 197-14 0 as mentioned in the letter, whereas the rents mentioned in the jamabandi (Exhibit H 1) of the tenants with respect to the lands sold by the tenants show a much smaller rental of Rs. 125 odd. But if the rents were enhanced in the year 1835 (1272) to Rs. 197-14 0, mentioned in the letter as well as in Exhibit H-1 of the year 1865-66 there is no reason why this enhanced rental should not have been mentioned in the butwara khasra (Exhibit 22) of 1868 (1275). His statement that Sunder Sahay had no zerait in his putti before and after the partition is falsified by Exhibit 22, the butwara khasra, which has been signed by all the malikan and which shows that Sunder Sahay had some zerait before the partition and was given some zerait proportionate to his share after partition.

Exhibit D is not properly proved and nobody had known it. Prayag Datt says that he prepared a list of documents, but he does not prove that the list in question is in his handwriting. It was not regularly prepared in the ordinary course of business, for the entries are not in order. Entry No. 27 mentions the letter in question (Exhibit E), dated the 19th December 1865, but the entries before that relate to the years 1866 and 1867. The manner in which the document has been produced is also suspicious. I do not, therefore, attach much importance to this list, Exhibit D. As shown above, it was not legally proved and I wonder how it was marked as an Exhibit in the case in face of the objection of the plaintiff. I have already shown that Exhibit E is not genuine. The internal evidence of the letter itself is against the actual state of affairs. It is also suspicious that Sunder Sahay, who was then only a part-proprietor and joint-holder of the lands in the estate, should have written the letter in question recognizing the purchase of Babu Nathu Lal Choudhury. He had no authority to do so. His right to exclusive possession of 8 annas takhta in the village arose only after the partition subsequent to the letter in question. This view is strengthened by the fact that no rent receipt has been produced by the defendant of the time of Babu Nathu Lal Choudhury either on behalf of the landlords or on behalf of Sunder Sahay.

Witness Balaqi (D. W. No. 8) says in his deposition that he and the other tenants made over the receipts which they had obtained from Sunder Sahay in respect of the kasht lands in question, to Babu Nathu Lal Choudhury. These receipts are not produced. Nathu Lal Choudhury was a lessee in respect of 2 annas out of the 8-annas share of Mauza Jainti from the year 1271. He was a lessee of a portion of 8 annas share from the year 1283 and of the entire share from the year 1289. We do not find any receipt of rent paid by him before he became a lessee of the entire 16 annas.

Thus, neither the receipts of the vendors, nor his own, in proof of having paid rents to Nathu Lal Choudhury, have been produced. These receipts must have been made over to the defendants when the Factory was sold to them in the year 1283, for, if he was careful to give the letter Exhibit E to the defendants' predecessors, certainly he would not have withheld the receipts.

Two rent-receipts (Exhibits N and N-1), dated the 18th December 1892 and 20th April 1891, respectively, have been filed. These purport to be rent receipts for Rs. 125 each given by Matuk Lal's Agent to the Pirakhpur Factory representing Mr. Hudson, on account of the rent of the kasht lands in Mauza Etwarpur Jainti, the former for the Aghan kisht of 1300 and the latter for the Phagun kisht of 1293. Rudra Prasad, witness No. 10 for the defendants, the writer thereof, denies that he wrote the words "mai kasht" (including kasht) and swears that "mai" is an interpolation and is not in his handwriting and that the word "kasht" has been substituted for "babat" which he wrote. The Subordinate Judge says that his evidence is vague and, therefore, does not accept it. The witness is corroborated by the receipt (Exhibit N 1) in which there are no words as "mai kasht." On the other hand, if this witness is unreliable his whole evidence must go out, in which case the receipts are not at all proved. If these receipts were in respect of kasht lands, certainly the lands must have been mentioned as is usually done in rent receipts. It is not shown how the Phagun kisht in Exhibit N and the Aghun kisht in Exhibit N-1 will each be Rs. 155 for then the rent of the lands will be much more than Rs. 250 which is not the case of the defendants. Mr. Manuk has very rightly abandoned these receipts as being suspicious and of no practical use. We cannot but accept Mr. Manuk's attitude in view of the evidence of Rudra Prasad. I, therefore, agree with him in discarding these receipts, for even if they be genuine they do not show that they relate to the lands in suit. The recognition of the defendants' kasht rights in the lands in suit on the basis of these receipts cannot be held to be proved. The only reliable document, therefore, on behalf of the defendant is the butwara khasra of 1868. As observed above, this Khasra shows some lands acquired by Nathu Lal Choudhury, but the rental shown there is at the rate of Rs. 3 per bigha, much less than that claimed for the lands in suit. Besides, the learned Subordinate Judge has held that there is nothing to show that the lands in the butwara khasra are identical with the lands in suit; so the butwara khasra does not help the defendants very much.

The case of the defendants is that Babu Nathu Lal Choudhury had acquired the lands in suit by purchase and when the Factory was sold to Mr. Henry William Hudson on the 23rd of July 1890, per Exhibit 12, the indenture of sale, the defendant succeeded to the Factory as well as to the lands in suit. By this sale-deed the vendor Nathu Lal purports to sell to Mr. Hudson "the Pirakhpur Indigo Concern together with all the Taluks, Mauzas, villages, lands, hereditaments and premises of which the particulars are set forth in the schedule hereto as on and from the 1st day of November one thousand eight hundred and eighty nine (1-89) for the price of rupees one hundred and sixty thousand". There are separate schedules attached to the sale deed showing in detail the villages, the Thicadari Mouzas and the kasht lands. In Etwarpur Jainti some zerait lands of 4 bighas 10 cottas are mentioned. In the list showing the kasht-kari of Nathu Lal only 4 bighas 7 cottas is mentioned. The schedules are very long and detailed, purporting to give a complete list of all lands pertaining to the Factory, yet these lands in dispute are not mentioned therein.

Thus, the Factory did not acquire the lands in suit by purchase from Babu Nathu Lal Choudhury and their claim to hold the lands as his successors falls to the ground. The previous history of the lands in question, and the question whether and how they were acquired by Babu Nathu Lal Choudhury do not, therefore, arise. Therefore, the Factory cannot claim the lands in suit as successors of Nathu Lal Choudhury.

The defendants base their claim upon the recognition by the proprietors in 1303 and 1304 (1896-97).

Baba Nathu Lal Choudhury was in possession of the 8-annas Patti of Sunder Sahay which had become 16-annas of Touzi No. 9507 by partition, originally under written leases (Exhibits 18 and 19), and on the expiry of the term thereof he was holding over under an oral settlement up to 1302. In the meantime, he sold the Factory to Mr. Henry William Hudson on the 23rd July 1890 who thus came to be in possession of Etwarpur Jainti on verbal settlement as a lessee thereof. The lease expired on 30th Bhado 1302 (4th September 1895).

A written lease was again executed in favour of the proprietors of the Factory, Mr. William Hudson and Mr. Henry Hudson, for seven years from 1305 to 1312 (1898 to 1905).

The defendant's case is, that he was not in possession of the village under any lease for the period 1303 and 1304, and during that period he paid rent for the lands in suit to Matuk Lal and whatever defect may have been in their title to their kasht right in the lands in suit, it was cured by the recognition of their right by the proprietors in 1303 1304. In support of this contention, Exhibits I and K of 16th April 1896 are relied upon. Before 1303, on the 13th July 1895, (1302), Matuk Lal had executed a conveyance in favour of the plaintiff and his co-sharers, defendants third party 4 to 11, transferring his proprietary interest in the village. Thus, the receipts, Exhibits I and K, were granted after Matuk Lal had conveyed away his interest to the plaintiff. Exhibit I purports to be a receipt granted by Khub Lal, Patwari, in place of Dwarka Lal, Patwari, on behalf of Matuk Lal for Rs. 138 in respect of the current kisht 1303. Khub Lal's son, Baldeo Lal, has been examined, but he does not prove the signature of Khub Lal on this receipt. This receipt is not, therefore, legally proved in the case and was marked subject to objection. The Sub-Judge was bound to dispose of the objection of the defendants as to the admissibility of this document. Dwarka Lal was the registered Patwari as admitted by Baldeo Lal, and Khub Lal was his Naib. Khub Lal was not at all a registered Patwari and there is no evidence that he was in charge of the collections of the village. Dwarka Lal must have engaged him as his assistant in order to help him in the writing of village papers. There is a column in the receipt for the signature of the landlords or recognised agent. It is not proved whether any body signed in this column and, if so, who signed it and under what authority. The Patwari whose duty consists in making collections is not entitled to recognise tenancy rights. The landlord is not bound by the receipt given by the Patwari recognising a person as his tenant. This is clear from the pronouncement of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Russo Chinese Bank v. Li Yau Sam (13): "If the agent be held out as having only a limited authority to do on behalf of his principal acts of a particular class, then the principal is not bound by an act done outside that authority, even though it be an act of that particular class, because, the authority being thus represented to be limited, the party prejudiced has notice, and should ascertain whether or not the act is authorised."

This view has also been adopted in this Court in several cases: Janki Sahu v. Thakur Run Bahadur Singh (14), Wyatt, A. W. N. v. Sheo Gobind Sahu (15) and Juthan Lal v. Ram Dat Singh (16).

It is not within the ordinary business of the Patwari to recognise new tenants or the transfers of tenancy or the splitting up thereof. These are very valuable rights for the landlord and, unless expressly given, he will not be bound by the acts of his servants. The onus is upon the person who relies upon the recognition by the Patwari to show that it was within his delegated authority to do so. In the particular case the receipt is not given by the registered Patwari and hence the principle applies with greater force and the defendant should have proved Khub Lal's authority to recognise tenancy right of the defendants. There is no reason why the landlord was not asked by the defendant to sign this important receipt in the column provided for it. Matuk Lal himself at that time was the outgoing proprietor.

No doubt, the sale-deed was executed in 1895. The balance of the consideration-money Rs. 11,500 was paid on the 29th August 1896, corresponding to the end of 1303, and the plaintiff came into possession of the property on that date. But the title in the plaintiff vested on the date the sale deed was executed and registered. The possession was deferred till the entire consideration money was paid up. Matuk Lal himself had no right, therefore, to create any incumbrance against the interest of the plaintiff-purchaser: Lokenath Singh v. Dhwakeshwar Prosad Narayan Singh (17). Matuk Lal being in possession was entitled to the income for the year 1303, the annual rent of which was Rs. 520. The sum of Rs. 138 received by him was given credit and the balance Rs. 382 was paid by the purchaser per receipt Exhibit 7 on the same date that the receipt for the consideration-money (Exhibit 6) was granted. The defendants continued to be in possession as before they were holding over. There is nothing to show that the receipt in question was shown to the plaintiff purchaser. All that is proved is that Rs. 138 received by Matuk Lal from the Pirakhpur Factory as rent was adjusted in the account. Exhibit K is a wasilbaqi prepared between the 1st and the 5th April 1897, of which the heading runs as follows :—

" Wasilbaqi account settled in the presence of the tenants of Etwarpur Jainti of Babu Matuk Lal Sahu, the present proprietors Dhanno Lal Choudhury, Sobnan Lal Choudhury, Bhanoo Lal Choudhury for the years 1303 and 1304, sir period. "

According to the defendants, this document was prepared by the Moharrir of the Factory, Bisheshar Lal, in the presence of the tenants and the agent of Matuk Lal for the purpose of preparing an account of the money collected from the raiyats of Etwarpur Jainti and the balance due for the years 1303 and 1304. Matuk Lal had already executed a sale-deed conveying his interest of Etwarpur Jainti to the plaintiffs on the 13th July 1895 previous to the said wasilbaqi about two years previous to the said account.

The consideration-money of the sale deed in question was paid on the 29th August 1896, corresponding to the 6th Bhadon 1303. In the case of Narayan Venkap Ohetti v. Laxuman Shantaya Kini (16) it was held that a registered deed comes into operation from the date of its execution and that it is immaterial whether it is accompanied by possession or not. This is also so under section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act whereby the ownership is transferred as soon as parties agree to do so, but the possession may be postponed till the payment of the consideration-money. If in this case the intention was that the plaintiffs-vendees would get actual possession of the property after they had paid the consideration-money, then Matuk Lal may be deemed to be in possession of the village in 1303. The verbal lease of the village to the Factory expired in 1302, that is, on the 4th September 1895, and before that the title in the property had passed on the 13th July 1895 by virtue of the sale deed to the plaintiffs. The position, therefore, is that, while the plaintiffs were the rightful owners of the property, Matuk Lal was in possession of it, and as negotiation for the renewal of the lease were going on, the kabuliyat, Exhibit 1, was ultimately formally executed on the 19th April 1897 by the Factory in favour of the plaintiffs as having taken a lease for seven years from 1305 to 1311.

The Factory, in anticipation of the lease, remained in direct possession of the property and will be deemed to have held over. In the account (Exhibit K) Rs. 1,150 is the total demand for the two years 1303 and 1304 including the arrears of Rs. 72 odd. Matuk Lal was entitled to get ¾ths of the rent for the year 1303, that is, up to Jaith Kisht, inasmuch as the consideration was paid in July and, therefore, he was entitled to get ¾ths of the rent of Rs. 575 odd for the year 1303. In other words, he was entitled to get Rs. 72 odd plus Rs. 432, that is, a little over Rs. 500.

Thus, in Exhibit 7, dated the 29th August 1896, after payment of the consideration-money as between the purchaser plaintiff and Matuk Lal, the account is made up showing the rent due to him to be Rs. 520 out of which Rs. 138, which he had received from the Factory direct, was deducted and the balance Rs. 382 was paid in cash by the plaintiff, and, therefore, out of Rs. 1,150 shown in Exhibit K as due for two years 1303 and 1304, Rs. 1,112, after deducting Rs. 138 paid to Matuk Lal, was made payable to the plaintiffs-purchasers. On the back of it Mr. Hudson noted "balance Rs. 1,150, to pay on demand Rs. 1,112."

All this clearly indicates that the Factory was recognised as a holding over the property during the years 1303 and 1304 on the expired lease. We are not, therefore, concerned with the account except for showing that Rs. 138 was paid by the Factory for occupation of the lands in suit during those years. The land was in their direct cultivation and certainly they had to pay rent for the years, whether the land was the bakasht of the landlord or the kasht of the Factory. The accounts, therefore, do not necessarily show that the defendant had kasht right in the lands.

The case, therefore, really hinges upon the receipt for the year 1303. This receipt, no doubt, shows rent for the land in suit realised by Matuk Lal. As already observed, the receipt has not been proved, nor the authority of Khub Lal to grant it. The plaintiffs, admittedly, on the 16th April 1896, when the receipt was granted, were not in possession of the lands, and, therefore, they are not bound by it. They could be bound only when the receipt operated as a valid recognition by Matuk Lal as a landlord. Matuk Lal, who had already sold away his interest, had no right to recognise, and it has been shown above that there was no valid recognition against him even by the receipt given by Khub Lal, the assistant of the Patwari Dwarka Lal

The kabu'iyat (Exhibit 1), dated the 19th April 1897, executed by Mr. Hamilton Hudson soon after the aforesaid documents (Exhibits I and K) were executed, goes directly against the defendant's case both as to the direct possession of Matuk Lal during the years 1303 and 1304 and as to the recognition by him or by the plaintiffs of the raiyati interest in the village. This kabuliyat recites the account (Exhibit K) in the following words:—

"There was Rs. 1,150 on account of rent for 1303 and 1304 F. due by the tenants, out of this Rs. 138 had already been received by the former proprietors, and the remaining sum of Rs. 1,012 was found justly payable to the landlords by the tenants and by me the thiccadar which I, the thiccadar, have paid to them in cash and in one lump on getting receipts, and the landlords have brought it to their possession and appropriation, and I, the thiccadar, will get the same from the tenants of the village and from my own tahvil, and as regards the arrears due by the tenants, and by me, the thiccadar, for 1304 F which I have paid to the landlords I shall have no objection."

This clearly shows that, although there was no lease executed, the Factory held over the possession of the village under the expired lease and they undertook to pay rents due from the tenants to the landlord and in their turn to realise same from the tenants. It is noteworthy that 37 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs, the land in dispute, had been described in the very opening portion of the kabuliyat as the zerait of the proprietor. As to the occupancy right therein, the defendant clearly covenanted that the defendent would have no occupancy right in the land and that on the expiry of the lease the defendant would give up possession in favour of the landlord. Whatever anomalies might have been created before that, the Factory repudiated their claim, if any, to the lands in suit. The receipt (Exhibit I) and the account (Exhibit K) are inconclusive to confer a right of occupany upon the defendants.

No question arises as to whether the land was really zera't or bakasht. The onus is upon the defendants to establish their tenancy. The defendants cannot plead, as contended by Mr. Manuk, that they were ignorant of their own rights. They were in direct possession of the lands since 1890 and they must have known their own title with respect thereto. The previous documents might have created some confusion as to the rights of the parties. There was, therefore, a bona fide dispute and it was settled definitely between the new purchasers and the defendants that the land in suit will be the zerait of the landlords and that the defendant would not acquire any right of occupancy. The document does not purport to bar the acquisition of the occupancy right, nor does it extinguish any such if it was already acquired. It declares what the rights of the parties in the lands in suit were. It purports to describe the real state of affairs. It terminates any possible dispute that might arise after the termination of the lease. In this view, it is a good evidence of the fact that the lands were admitted to be the zerait or the bakasht of the proprietors and in which the defendants had not acquired any right of occupancy. The contemporaneous public record, namely, the Settlement Record of Rights, clearly shows that the lands were the bakasht of the landlords, and were not the kasht or occupancy holding. That document raises a strong presumption against the defendants and the presumption is confirmed by Exhibit J executed a few months later. Possibly from the history of this land, namely, that it was entered in the butwara khasra (Exhibits 21 and 22) as the land under the Indigo zerait of Babu Nathu Lal Choudhury and that Matuk Lal has realised Rs. 138 as rent or compensation of the land in the interregnum of 1303 and 1304, the plaintiff as new purchaser thought of clearing up the doubt regarding the status of the defendants and insisted upon having the land clearly stated as the zerait and the defendants undertaking to give them up after the termination of the lease. The defendants were the applicants at that time for the taking of the lease of the village and but for the clear declaration in the kabuliyat it was not possible for them to take the lease. Therefore, the contract between the parties amounted to a relinquishment and release of any right that might have accrued to the defendants for the valuable consideration of the right acquired in return in the shape of the lease of the entire village. There is nothing in the statutory provisions in the Bengal Tenancy Act or in the general principles regulating the relationship of landlord and tenant invalidating the transaction in question: call it a relinquishment or surrender.

The Factory accepted their position as that of a mere lessee in the lands in suit and consistently dealt with the lands as the zer it or the bakasht of the landlord in which they had no right of occupancy. Only a few years after the execution of the kabuliyat and during the continuance of their thicca, on the 27th October 1903, the defendants filed Road Cess Returns (Exhibits 13 and 3 A) in the Collectorate under Act IX of 1880, in which they described the land 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs as nij jote in their use and cultivation with an annual rental of Rs. 398 2 0. They are bound by their admissions contained therein under the Road Cess Act and they are estopped from claiming contrary to that entry. Part I of the Return in the Road Cess Act is designed for return of lands which are zerait or bakasht of the proprietors. Part II is intended for lands which are the kasht of tenants. If it was the Factory's kasht it would have been mentioned in Part II. The Return filed by the Patwari Isher Lal (Exhibit 11) also shows the same thing, i. e., the land was the zerait of the proprietors. The defendants knew that they had not purchased the land from Babu Nathu Lal Choudhury in the sale deed, dated the 23rd July 1890, (Exhibit 12), whereby the Factory was transferred to them, and, therefore, they were trespassers over the land if it was at all the occupancy holding of Babu Nathu Lal Choudhury. They had acquired no occupancy right and were, therefore, not relinquishing any or contracting about it contrary to the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act when they definitely declared that on the expiry of the term they would not claim any kasht right in the lands by virtue of their occupation during the term of the lease or on account of their having previous possession as trespassers. There was no dispute between the parties at the time when the Road Cess Returns were filed. These Returns clearly show that both the plaintiff and the defendants declared the lands to be the zerait of the malik. The defendants' kasht right in the lands in suit was separate from their rights as lessees of the proprietary interest in the village. If that is so, the kasht right should have been clearly transferred either by the sale-deed of 1890 or by a separate deed. But the sale-deed of 1890, as shown above, does not purport to transfer the kasht right of Babu Nathu Lal, if any, in the lands in suit. Whereas the lease of Eswarpur Jainti was expressly mentioned in the sale deed, the kasht right in 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs in the suit does not find any place in the schedules which are the detailed description of all the premises and hereditaments transferred to the defendants. The possession of the defendants over the lands in suit was, therefore, only as lessees of the proprietors, and not as tenants thereof.

No particular mode is prescribed under the Bengal Tenancy Act (sections 85 and 87) for "abandonment" and "relinquishment" of an occupancy holding and there is nothing wrong in abandoning it by means of a contract. So, even if the defendants were recognized in 1303 as the tenants of the land, they clearly abandoned their rights therein in 1897 and in the Road Cess Returns filed by them.

The plaintiff claims recovery of possession and it is for the defendants to prove their title in order to successfully resist the claim of the plaintiffs, they rely upon the kabuliyat (Exhibit 1) dated 1307, as their title-deed. If, upon a true construction of it, it is found that, even if they had previously acquired that right, they abandoned and relinquished that right, the plaintiff will be entitled to recover possession of the same whether abandonment was specifically pleaded or not.

Again, the defendants claim their right in the land as separate from their lease of the village, and as not passing with the lease. By the sale deeds of 1909 and 1912 Mr. Vinsent is said to have acquired only the interest of the Hudsons as lessees of the village, and not the occupancy right in the lands in suit, and after the termination of the lease, Mrs. Hudson the successor-in-interest of the Hudsons and the owner of the Factory purports to excute a sub lease (Exhibit A) dated the 30th January 1914, in favour of the defendant. This, of course, is a nominal document, for such a valuable right, the annual value of which is Rs. 397, could not be transferred at an annual rental of Rs. 5 only. This is simply with a view to show that the kasht right was separate from the thica right in the village. In the second place, the sub-lease in question is a permanent lease and under the authority of Bipin Behari v. Amrita Lal Bhattacha,i (7) Mr. Hudson had no right to grant a sub-lease. In my view the case reported in Abdul Karim v. Abdul Rahman (8) has no application. Mrs. Hudson had practically abandoned the holding and has transferred her residence from this country to England. She has ceased to cultivate the land and she has, therefore, lost any right in the land and the plaintiff is entitled to re-enter.

The defendants' right to hold the land terminated with the lease and they became trespassers after the expiry thereof and ceased to be tenants, either occupancy or non occupancy, or of any other kind. I do not think that the ruling reported in Pierpont Morgan v. Ramjee Ram (9) applies to this case. The abandonment in this case is proved by the documents themselves. I do not for a moment conceive that the ignorance or carelessness of the defendants of their title places them in a better position. Under the law they will be charged with the knowledge and admittedly their agents knew it full well. They cannot disassociate themselves from the knowledge acquired by their agents in the regular course of business.

I, therefore, hold that the defendants have failed to prove that they acquired tenancy right in the lands in suit and to rebut the presumption of the Record of Rights.

The result is, that I would set aside the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge, decree the appeal and consequently decree the suit of the plaintiff for khas possession.

I regret that I have to differ with the view taken by my learned brother for whose views I have very great respect. I am in a still unfortunate position that I have to differ with his views which are in agreement with those of the learned Subordinate Judge. I have, therefore, given my best thought and consideration before I could venture to take the contrary view. I tried my best but could not persuade myself to agree with my learned brother.

JUDGMENT.

DAWSON-MILLER, C. J.—The appellant instituted this suit on the 5th December 1914 claiming to recover possession from the defendants of an area of 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs of land in Mauza Etwarpur Jainti in the District of Muzaffarpur. It is admitted that the plaintiff is the proprietor of the Collectorate estate bearing touzi No. 2507 which originally formed an 8-annas share in the Mauza and that the lands in suit form part of his estate. Mr. W. A. Vincent, the principal defendant, claims khas possession of the land as sub-lessee of Mrs. Hudson, the defendant No. 12, who claims to be the occupancy raiyat at an annual jama of Rs. 197-14-0 including road-cess. These two defendants alone contest the suit. The suit was originally tried before the Subordinate Judge of Muzaffarpur who by his judgment, dated the 17th February 1917, found in favour of the defendants and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff preferred an appeal to the High Court which was heard by Mullick and Jwala Prasad, JJ., who by their judgments dated the 18th August 1920 took different views, the former being of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed and the latter that it should be allowed. Consequently, the present appeal is brought before this Bench by the plaintiff under clause 10 of the Letters Patent. The facts out of which the dispute arises are fully set out in the judgments of the Courts below but the points which have been urged before us on behalf of the respective parties make it necessary to bear in mind certain dates in the chain of transactions under which the parties acquired the respective interests claimed by them.

Up to the year 1868 Mauza Etwarpur Jainti formed part of a permanently settled estate held by a number of joint proprietors. In that year Sunder Sahay, one of the proprietors, by a Collectorate partition, obtained an 8-annas share in Etwarpur Jainti as a separate estate bearing touzi No. 9507, and there is some evidence to show that, even before that date, he was in possession under a private partition. The lands in suit formed part of that estate. Sunder Sahay died in about 1874 and his estate passed into the hands of Matuk Lal and Sheo Prasad. Sometime between 1883 and 1890, Matuk Lal acquired Sheo Prasad's share and became the sole proprietor of the estate. On the 15th July 1895 Matuk Lal, by an instrument in writing of that date, conveyed his proprietary interest to the plaintiff Bhanu Lal Choudhary and his three brothers. Matuk Lal, however, retained possession until the 29th August 1896 when the purchase money was paid and possession transferred to the purchasers. On the 23rd June 1909 by a partition between the plaintiff and his brothers the estate in question was allotted to the plaintiff who is now the sole proprietor.

The defendants' claim to the occupancy interest in the disputed holding rests on a series of transactions which began in the year 1854 (1271 F) when Sunder Sahay was either sole or joint proprietor of the Mauza. In that year Nathu Lal Choudhury who owned an Indigo Factory, now known as the Pirakpur Factory, purchased from five tenants of Sunder Sahay the whole or protions of their respective occupancy holdings measuring altogether 26 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs of land which constitutes the subject of this suit. It is not disputed that the land formed part of the occupancy holding of Nathu Lal's vendors or that Nathu Lal took possession, but it is contended that the holding was not transferable and that the purchaser was never recognised by the landlord. It is said that from 1864 to 1876 Nathu Lal remained in possession of this holding ostensibly as an occupancy tenant and growing indigo thereon for his Factory, but no rent receipts are forthcoming for that period. After Sunder Sahay's death, Sheo Prasad and Matuk Lal being the proprietors, Nathu Lal on the 30th June 1876 took an ijara lease from Sheo Prasad of his interest in the Mauza for a term of seven years. In 1881 he also took from Matuk Lal an ijara of the latter's interest in the Mauza and thus became the ijaradar of the whole estate comprised in touzi No. 9507. It is conceded that the raiyati interest, if it existed, over the 36 bighas would not become merged in the ijara interest. These leases were renewed from time to time and were still in existence on the 23rd July 1890 when Nathu Lal sold his whole interest in the Factory to Mr. H. W. Hudson, the father-in law and predecessor in-title of the defendant No. 12. The appellant contends that Nathu Lal's raiyati interest, if any, did not pass by that sale and that, in any case, Hudson was never recognised as an occupancy tenant by the landlord. Mr. Hudson who was admittedly the ijaradar thereafter remained in possession until the ijara leases expired on the 4th September 1895. It will be remembered that about two months earlier, on the 13th July 1895, Matuk Lal, then the sole proprietor, had executed a conveyance of his proprietary interest in favour of the plaintiff and his brothers but possession was not made over to the purchasers until the 29th August of the following year. About eight months later, in April 1897, the new landlords granted a new ticca lease to Mr. Hudson for a period of seven years. It is the appellant's case that on the expiration of the old ijara the right of possession to the whole estate including the disputed land reverted to the landlord. The defendants contend that the right of possession remained in Mr. Hudson as the occupancy tenant by purchase from Matuk Lal Choudhury, and that he was recognised as occupier by Matuk Lal, the outgoing landlord, and, further, that his interest as an occupancy raiyat was also recognised by the appellant who about that time acquired Matuk's proprietary interest.

In 1904, the lease of 1897 having expired, a new ticca lease was granted to Mr. Hudson of Etwarpur Jainti, together with other property not previously included, for a term of nine years which expired in 1913 and was not renewed. In the meantime, Mr. H. W. Hudson died and his estate devolved upon his two sons, Harry Hudson and Percy Hudson. In 1909 the former died and Percy Hudson became the sole owner of the Factory and of the occupancy tenancy, if it existed. In the same year Mr. Vincent, the then Manager of the Factory, acquired a 4 annas share of the Factory from Percy Hudson, and in 1912, Percy Hudson having died, he acquired the remaining interest from Percy's widow, the defendant No. 12. The transfer to Mr. Vincent did not include the raiyati interest which, if it existed, had passed to Percy Hudson and afterwards to his widow, but Mrs. Hudson, when she transferred her interest in the Factory to Mr. Vincent, had agreed to grant him also a sub-lease of the occupancy holding and on the 13th January 1914 she executed a sub-lease of the holding in favour of Vincent who claims to be an under-raiyat of Mrs. Hudson.

It was contended that Mrs. Hudson had relinquished her raiyati interest, if any, by going to England before 1914, but her agent was always on the spot and no question was raised in the pleadings or by the issues upon this point and the matter was not gone into in the evidence. Mullick, J., in the Court below, declined, in the circumstances, to go into this matter which was one of mixed law and fact and we consider that he was right in so doing.

The first question which arises for decision is, whether Nathu Lal Choudhury acquired an occupancy holding in 1864 and whether he was recognised by the landlord. The fact that he purchased the disputed land from Bhikhari Raut and Bulaki Choudhury and other occupancy tenants of Sunder Sahay and remained in possession paying rent to Sunder Sahay for a period of something like 12 years before he acquired a ticca lease of any part of the village is proved, in my opinion, beyond all reasonable doubt. Of his vendors the two above mentioned were alone alive at the date of the trial and gave evidence of the facts above mentioned. Their evidence was corroborated by Pryag Dutta, an old man of 80, who was Munshi of the Factory for seven years from 1272 F to 1279 F, and the evidence of these witnesses finds some corroboration from Ram Charita Sahai, a cousin of Sunder's. The evidence of these witnesses leaves no doubt in my mind that Nathu Lal purchased the disputed land from the tenants and was in occupation as an occupancy holder from the date of his purchase. It is contended, however, that the holding was not transferable and that Nathu Lal was never recognised by the landlord. It is for the defendants to prove either that the holding was transferable by custom, or, failing that, that the transfer was recognised by the landlord. In my opinion there is no evidence of such a custom, but I am satisfied that the Subordinate Judge and Mullick, J., were justified in finding on the evidence that Nathu Lal was recognised as an occupancy tenant by Sunder Sahay and so acquired an occupancy right in the disputed land before he became the ijaradar of the Mauza. A letter, dated the 19th December 1865, purporting to be signed by Sundar Sahay recognising Nathu Lal as cultivator of 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs of occupancy holding, was produced by the defendants and proved by Pryag Datta who knew Sunder Sahay's handwriting. The two surviving vendors, as already stated, were also called and proved that, before 1868, when the batwara partition took place Sunder Sahay held the proprietary interest by private partition, which would account for the fact that the letter of the 19th December 1865 was signed by Sunder Sahay alone and not by the others co-sharers. The exact date of the private partition is not definitely deposed to, but from contemporaneous documents it would appear to have been not later than the year 1864. In my opinion the matter is not of much consequence as Sunder Sahay was sole proprietor in 1868, and the recognition given earlier, if genuine, must be deemed to have held good when he acquired the sole interest under the batwara proceedings of that year and permitted the new tenant to remain in possession without objection until he died in 1874. The authenticity of the letter in question was challenged partly on the ground that the signature was different from other admitted signatures of Sunder Sahay and partly on the ground of internal evidence. The letter refers to Road Cess to be levied by the Government in future, whereas the first Road Cess Act was not passed until five or six years later, which fact, it is contended, casts the greatest suspicion upon the genuineness of the document. As to the signature the document was produced from the proper custody and is over 30 years old and may be presumed to be genuine until the contrary is proved. No expert evidence was given as to the handwriting and I am not prepared to differ from the view of the Subordinate Judge and Mullick, J., on this point. The fact that the rental therein named of Rs. 197-14-0 is said to include any Road Cess to be levied by the Government in future seems to point rather in favour of the genuineness of the document than otherwise. It is not a violent assumption to suppose that the imposition of Road Cess by Government was in contemplation some years before the first Act was passed. If the document is supposed to have been fabricated at the date which it bears and which the stamp on it shows, the reference to Road Cess was ex hypothesi a natural thing to include as no person, forger or otherwise, would refer to a tax which was not in any one's contemplation at the time. If it was farbicated recently for the purposes of this case, there seems to have been no object in introducing it at all. It would have been sufficient to say "including "road cess" without any reference to a future Government tax. Cesses were at that time frequently claimed by the landlord in addition to rent although they were usually disallowed unless expressly mentioned in the contract creating the tenancy, but a forger at the present day would hardly be likely to introduce into a document purporting to be dated 1865 a reference to Government road cess when he must have known that no Government road cess was imposed until several years later. There are, however, other documents which support the defendants upon this part of their case. The jama wasilbaki papers for 1271, 1273 and 1277 F. which are landlord's papers show how the 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs passed from the previous tenants to Nathu Lal Choudhury as purchaser. If the purchaser was not recognised it is inconceivable that he would be mentioned in these documents as the new tenant. These documents also describe Sunder Sahay as the malik under a private partition in 1271 and 1273 F. (1864 and 1866 A. D.) and as malik under a Government partition in 1277 F. (1870 A. D.). This indicates that the private partition mentioned by the defendants' witnesses took place not later than 1864 and explains why Sunder Sahay alone signed the letter of acknowledgment of the 19th December 1865. Further corroboration is afforded by the measurement khasra of the batwara proceedings dated the 4th December 1868 which shows, as pointed out by Mullick, J., a quantity of land as indigo zerait or indigo zerait of the Factory, a term in common use to designate kasht land of the Factory on which indigo is grown. The same document shews that Bulaki and Doma Sahu, two of Nathu's vendors, no longer held that portion of their holdings which they had transferred to Nathu. That the letter of acknowledgment by Sunder Sahay was in existence in 1872 is proved by a list of documents (Exhibit D) forwarded to Nathu Lal by his then Manager Mr. Exshaw whose signature it bears on its back. This document has also been challenged as spurious, but I am unable to accept that view. It follows, therefore, that if Sunder Sahay's letter of acknowledgment is a forgery the forgery took place before 1872 and long before any dispute arose as to the tenant's occupancy rights in the land and at a time when there was no apparent object in fabricating such a document. From the evidence as a whole, I am satisfied that Nathu Lal acquired by purchase from the former tenants of the land in suit, and that he paid rent to the proprietor Sunder Sahay as the witnesses allege and that he was recognised as tenant by Sunder Sahay. There was nothing but the merest suspicion to cast any doubt upon the genuineness of the document relied upon except the word of one witness Ezid Bakhsh who says he lived in Sunder Sahay's house for 8 or 9 years and that the signature was not that of Sunder Sahay. He was, however, only 11 or 12 years old at the time and I do not consider his evidence sufficiently reliable to disprove the signature when weighed against the other evidence in the case.

I have had an opportunity of perusing the judgments about to be delivered by my learned colleagues and have given them my earnest consideration. I regret that I have been unable to arrive at the same conclusion. It is true that the names of the tenants in the jamabandi papers do not agree in all respects with the names in the batwara khasra. The latter paper, however, clearly shows that the Factory was a recognised tenant of between 8 and 9 bighas, and there is further indigo zerait shown of about 29 bighas without the name of any tenant. The tenants are not bound by the Khasra and there may have been reasons why the whole 36 bighas were not definitely stated by the landlord as the Factory's zerait which it is impossible to explain after this lapse of time. I am unable to impute a wholesale forgery to the predecessors of the defendants and to disbelieve the verbal evidence in the case merely because the batwara khasra and the jamabandi papers are not in all respects similar. The tenants vary from year to year both in name and number as appears from the jamabandi papers themselves. The fact that the jamabandi papers show the original rent of the transferred land as less than the agreed rent in the acknowledgment of 1865, is in accordance with the verbal evidence and the very fact that the latter shows an increase of rent seems to point to the genuineness of the document as there was nothing to be gained by introducing a greatly increased rental into the acknowledgment. Nor can I see why the acknowledgment of Nathu Lal as a transferee from previous tenants, if it be genuine, should be taken to be the creation of a new tenancy merely because the rent was increased. The document is precise in its terms as a recognition of a transfer from previous tenants and does not purport to create a new tenancy.

The next question is, whether Nathu Lal, by the conveyance of the 23rd July 1890, transferred his occupancy right to Mr. Hudson. I confess that this question is one of some difficulty. It depends upon the construction of the document. Mr. Hudson, the transferee, is dead and cannot be called as a witness and there is nothing to show whether at the time when he purchased the Factory he was even aware that his vendor had an occupancy holding in the disputed land. It seems fairly clear, however, from the document that it was the intention of the parties that all the interests of the existing proprietor in the property held by him in connection with the Factory's business should pass. The deed recites that the vendor has contracted for the sale of the Pirakpur Indigo Concern together with all the Talukas, Mauzas, villages lands, hereditaments and premises, of which particulars are set forth in the schedule. The schedule, a very long document, refers to the ticcadari interest in Mauza Etwarpur Jainti but does not specially include the occupancy right in the 36 bighas. The operative part of the deed purports to grant, transfer, assign, etc., unto the purchaser all and every the said Talukas, Mouzas and lands or parts or shares therein of which particulars are contained in the schedule "and also all other, if any, the hereditaments and property belonging to or forming a part of or held with the said Talukas, Mauzas, and lands..... .....and all manner of rights, liberties, easements privileges, profits, commodities, emoluments, advantages and appurtenances whatsoever to the said Talukas, Mauzas, land, Indigo Concern, and hereditaments belonging or in any wise appertaining." The construction of these words is not free from difficulty but in my opinion they were intended to pass to the purchaser all rights which the vendor possessed in the Mauzas, lands, etc., referred to, whether such rights were expressly set out in the schedule or not. The occupancy right in the disputed land in Mauza Etwarpur Jainti was certainly a right of property held with the ticcadari right in that Mauza although it did not belong to or form part of the interest of the ticcadar as such. It was also a right belonging in a sense to the Indigo Concern. The Indigo Concern, it is true, was not a legal entity and, therefore, in law was not capable of exercising rights of property but the term Indigo Concern as there used seems to me to have been used as synonymous with the proprietor of the Factory as such. And even the recitals refer to an agreement to transfer the Indigo Concern. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the occupancy right of Nathu Lal Choudhury did pass to Mr. Hudson by the conveyance. It is said that where there is ambiguity in the operative part of the deed one should look back to the recitals and be guided by what is therein contained in interpreting the ambiguity. This canon of construction, however, cannot in my opinion, apply in all cases where there is a doubt or difficulty in the construction of a document. If one is satisfied upon the natural construction of the operative part of the deed that certain property passes, notwithstanding that the construction may be difficult, I do not think that the recitals have any binding forse. The same difficulty, to some extent, arises in construing the recitals. In the present case, although the construction is not free from difficulty, I think it was the intention of the parties that all interests of the vendor in the Factory and in the land referred to should pass, and that the words of conveyance are wide enough to include the disputed land.

It next becomes necessary to determine whether Mr. Hudson was recognised as tenant of the occupancy holding by the landlord. It is well-established that the receipt of rent by the landlord from the transferee of a holding, not transferable by custom, will validate the transfer. But the gomastha or Patwari of the landlord although authorised to collect rents on his behalf has no authority by taking rent from a transferee to create the relationship of landlord and tenant between his master and the transferee. In such cases the landlord would not generally be bound unless he accepted the rent knowing the source from which it came. The absence of rent-receipts from which any inference can be drawn in the present instance arises from the fact that from the year 1876 up to 1913, except for a short period between September 1895 and April 1897, the occupier had also a ticca patta over the Manza including the disputed land and no separate rent-receipts for the 36 bighas in question would be necessary. There are, however, two receipts for the ticca rent for the Falgun kist of 1298 F. and for the Aghan kist of 1300 F. dated, respectively, the 20th April 1891 and the 18th December 1892 and marked Exhibits N 1 and N. These were granted by Matuk Lal when he was proprietor and which, if accepted, purport to show that the Factory had kasht lands in the Manza. I shall refer to these presently. There was also a receipt (Exhibit 1) for Rs. 138 dated the 18th Bysack 1303, corresponding to the 16th April 1896, signed by Khub Lal, a nephew of Dwarka Lal, the Patwari, which if brought to the notice of the landlord clearly shows that he recognised the Pirakpur Factory then owned by Mr. Hudson as the tenant of a holding in Eswarpur Jainti at a rental of Rs. 197-14 0, which could only be the holding in dispute in this suit. This document is important as it relates to the short period when there was no ticca lease in existence and when the defendants claim that Mr. Hudson was in possession and paying rent as an occupancy tenant. It is necessary to consider with some care the acts of the parties and the nature of the transactions which took place between the expiry of the old ijara lease of the 4th September 1895 when Mr. Hudson was in possession, and the 19th April 1897 when a new ticca patta was granted to him by the new proprietors whose interests are now represented by the appellant. The situation which existed at that time was as follows. Matuk Lal had executed a conveyance of his proprietary interest to the plaintiff and his brothers on the 13th July 1895 but the vendor remained in possession as the purchase-money was not paid. Mr. Hudson was at that time the ijaradar of the Manza, but his lease was about the (to ?) expire and did expire on the 4th September that year. His lease was not renewed until 1897 but, in the meantime, he remained in possession of the Factory and of the disputed land pending the completion of the transfer of the proprietary interest to the new purchasers. The only sum which was paid for rent during that time by anybody was admittedly the sum of Rs. 138. The defendant's case is, that Mr. Hudson paid this sum on the 16th April 1895 to Khub Lal who was authorised to collect rents on behalf of Matuk Lal who was still in possession as proprietor. It is further their case that this sum was paid on account of rent due by him as occupancy tenant, and was accepted by Khub Lal as such. There was, during this period, a sort of interregnum in the proprietorship of the estate and in the ticcadari interest. The instrument conveying the proprietary interest had been executed but possession was withheld pending the payment of the consideration money. The ticcadari lease of Mr. Hudson had come to an end and no new lease had been granted. The position was, therefore, somewhat unusual and the rights of the parties were not clearly defined. Mr. Hudson being no longer ticcadar was no longer entitled to collect rents from the tenants. The only person entitled to receive rents would be the registered proprietor Matuk Lal, and Mr. Hudson, as occupier of the 36 bighas which he claimed, would be liable to the proprietor for the rent of that holding. In support of the defendants contention that Mr. Hudson paid rent on account of his holding the defendants have produced the rent receipt above-mentioned of the 18th Bysack 1303 (16 April 1896) signed by Khub Lal. This shows that the total annual rental including road-cess was Rs. 197.14 0 and it shows that Rs. 138 on account of that rental were paid by the Treasurer of the Pirakpur Factory. Its authenticity has been disputed but I see no reason to doubt the genuineness of the receipt. The payment of this sum is proved by the witness Bhutan Misser, a servant of the Factory of 25 years standing. He says that the money was paid to Khub Lal who was Patwari under Matuk Lal and that the receipt was signed by Khub Lal in his presence. He further says that the money was paid on behalf of the Factory by Jogendra Babu, as the receipt shows, and that Jogendra was dismissed by the Factory some 15 years ago, which would be about 1902. He further says that the disputed lands were the kasht lands of the Factory and not the malik lands. That Khub Lal had authority to collect rents on behalf of the malik is proved to my satisfaction beyond all reasonable doubt. His son Baldeo Lal was called and from his evidence as well as that of other witnesses it appears that Dwarka Lal, his grand-uncle and uncle of his father Khub Lal, both of whom were dead, was the Patwari of the malik Matuk Lal and that a few years before Dwarka's death which occurred in 1306 F. (1899 A. D.) Khub Lal who was Dwarka's Naib performed the duties of Patwari on behalf of his uncle. I am satisfied in the evidence that this sum was paid to Khub Lal by the Factory as rent of the holding to the person who at that time was authorised to receive rents. The appellant contends that this sum of Rs. 138 was not paid by the Factory at all but was collected from a number of other tenants and has produced two documents in support of his contention. I shall deal with these presently. It does not follow, however, because Khub Lal received rent from Mr. Hudson, that, therefore, the landlord recognised him as a tenant. It must be shown that the landlord had knowledge of the transaction and ratified it either expressly or by implication. The only other receipts of any importance are the Exhibits N 1 and N above referred to. These were of earlier date and granted when the Mauza was held under the ticca lease, and are for the ticcadari rent after Hudson became ticcadar. They purport to show that the proprietor of the Factory had some kasht lands in the village. They are dated the 20th April 1891 and the 18th December 1892 respectively. Their authenticity as rent-receipts is not impugned but it is said that the important words showing that the Factory had a jote in the village have been interpolated. The scribe of the later in date, Exhibit N, was called by the defendants and said they were signed by Matuk Lal and in cross-examination said the word "mai" before "kasht" was not in his handwriting and he doubted if the word "kasht" was. It is, therefore, clear that Exhibit N cannot be relied upon as showing that Mr. Hudson was recognised as an occupancy tenant. It does show, however, that Khub Lal was a person through whom the landlord was receiving rents. The other document is a receipt also signed by Matuk Lal and there is nothing to show that it is tampered with except a suggestion that the important words "with jote" have been interpolated. No expert evidence was called about it and I am not prepared to hold that it has been tampered with. By itself, it does not amount to much. If it were the only evidence in the case, I should certainly hold that it was not sufficient to prove that Mr. Hudson was recognised as an occupancy tenant of the disputed land.

The defendants contend, however, that the events which took place after September 1895 and which culminated in the grant of a new ticca lease in April 1897 prove that both Matuk Lal and his transferee recognised Mr. Hudson as the occupancy tenant. During this period, presumably, the Factory's business was going on as usual but the situation was, as already stated, somewhat peculiar. Mr. Hudson could not collect any rents as he was no longer ticcadar, and for the same reason he was not liable for ticcadari rent, and the only sum in fact paid was the Rs. 138 which I have already held was, in my opinion, paid by Mr. Hudson as tenant of the holding. But if and when a new ticca lease of the Mauza should be granted the question would arise as to how much should be paid, and by whom, to the landlords for the intervening period. Before the old ticca expired negotiations had been going on between Mr. Richardson on behalf of the Factory and Matuk Lal for a renewal as appears from the former's letter of the 19th June 1895. These negotiations appear to have been renewed when the new owners took over from Matuk Lal. I may mention here that this letter is relied on by the appellants as showing that Mr Richardson at all events did not consider that the Factory had an occupancy interest. Mr. Richardson was the proprietor of the Bikhampore Indigo Factory in the same district. He appears to have had some sort of partnership agreement with Mr. Hudson and used to supervise the management of the Pirakpur Factory which at that time was being managed by Mr. Harry Hudson, the son of the proprietor, then a young man without much experience. From the letter in question it appears that Matuk Lal wished to exclude from the new lease in addition to some kasht land of one of the tenants a plot of two bighas of the indigo zerait. Mr. Richardson replied that the land of the tenant named might be excluded but adds, "I cannot allow you to deduct from the patta the other two bighas of zerait land." This, no doubt, refers to a part of the disputed land and it is argued that if Mr. Richardson knew that the Factory had occupancy rights over it he would have replied that the landlord could not deprive him of it even if it were excluded from the ticca. This is not a necessary inference as Mr. Richardson firmly declined to exclude the land and his reasons for so doing may have been presumed by him to have been within the landlord's knowledge. Mr. Richardson was unfortunately not asked about it. But even Mr. Richardson's ignorance would not disprove the defendants' title. I may mention here that the term indigo zerait or even zerait is common in Factory parlance to denote land in the home cultivation of the Factory as distinguished from land held by other tenants and would include land over which the Factory had occupancy rights. This is proved by several witnesses and is supported by a passage in Amir Ali's Bengal Tenancy Act (2nd Edition, page 538) which states that in Bihar the term zerait is used to denote all lands in direct cultivation of indigo planters for cultivation of indigo as distinguished from cultivation of indigo by raiyats. The factory may hold the land as proprietor, tenure holder raiyat, or under-raiyat and whatever the interest may be the land is still called zerait. The word used in this sense has no connection with the term zerait as used in the Bengal Tenancy Act and meaning proprietor's private lands. Indeed, the appellant does not contend that the disputed land was landlord's zerait over which occupancy rights could not be acquired but merely bakasht. Nor is it contended that the term zerait when used in the documents in the case signifies landlords' zerait. The negotiations appear to have been renewed later on and the question was then gone into as to the payment of rent to the proprietors for the period when there was no ticca. According to the defendants' evidence a jama wasilbaki was prepared on the 8th April 1897 by Biseswar Lal, the muharrir of the Factory, in the presence of the tenants and Matuk Lal's agent Haji Gowsan Mian. Biseswar is dead but the document then prepared was proved by Gopal Lal who was present on the occasion. This document shows the amount of rent due to the landlords from the respective tenants including profit from trees and other sources for the two years in question and the sums paid on account for that period. It gives the area of the holdings and the annual jama and includes the Pirakpur Factory as the kashtkar of 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs at the annual jama of Rs. 197-14-0. The total amount due is shewn to be Rs. 1,150 for the two years less Rs. 138 paid by the Factory, none of the other tenants having paid anything. The document is endorsed by Mr. E. H. Hudson, who was then the manager, the endorsement showing the balance due to be Rs. 1,012. Mr. Hudson says the document was made preparatory to the new lease being executed. The new lease was executed 11 days later by the new proprietors and shows that Rs. 1,012 was the balance due from the tenants for the two years in question after crediting the Rs. 138. It is the defendants' case that the arrangement made between the parties when the new lease of the 19th April 1897 was granted was that for the two years corresponding to 1303 and 1304 F., when there was no ticca lease, the ticcadar should pay not at the jama of Rs 600 per annum payable under the new lease nor at Rs. 500 per annum payable under the old lease but Rs. 1,150 for the two years being the actual amount of rent as stated in Exhibit K payable by the tenants for those two years including the Rs. 197-14-0 the rent of the disputed holding less the sum of Rs. 138 already paid to Matuk Lal and that the ticcadar should collect the arrears, viz., Rs. 1,012, from the tenants himself with a stipulation that if he should fail to collect the rents from the tenants for the year 1303 F. the landlords should reimburse him.

The suggested reason for this arrangement is, that in the absence of a lease the landlord is entitled to collect the actual rents payable by the tenants including that of the disputed holding, but that, as a matter of convenience, Mr. Hudson should advance to the landlords the balance still due for the period and reimburse himself from the tenants. This was obviously a convenient course and would ensure continuity in the mode of payment by the tenants, but as Matuk Lal had been in possession during 1303 F. and might have collected some further rents, there was an express stipulation that the new landlords should be responsible if any of these rents could not be collected. We, therefore, find in the kabuliyat executed on behalf of Mr. Hudson in respect of the lease for 1897 a clause relating to the arrangement mentioned for the rents of the two previous years. The kabuliyat was put in evidence by the appellant himself and admittedly represents the terms of the patta which was not produced. The clause in question reads as follows :—

"There was Rs. 1,150 on account of rent for 1303 and 1304 F. due by the tenants, out of this Rs. 138 had already been received by the former proprietors, and the remaining sum of Rs. 1,012 was found justly payable to the landlords by the tenants and by me the ticcadar which I the ticcadar have paid to them in cash and in one lump on getting receipts, and the landlords have brought it to their possession and appropriation, and I the ticcadar will get the same from the tenants of the village and from my own tahvil, and as regards the arrears due by the tenants, and by me the ticcadar for 1304 F. which I have paid to the landlords I shall have no objection. If, as regards the arrears of 1303 F., I the ticcadar suffer any loss, then the landlords will be responsible therefor."

This clause clearly indicates to my mind that the landlords—that is, the appellant and his co-sharers knew that the rental payable by tenants for the two years was Rs. 1,150 and that Rs. 138 had been paid to their vendor and that the balance Rs. 1,012 was payable to the landlords from the tenants including in that category the ticcadar. It further shows that the ticcadar having paid this balance by arrangement to the new landlords should collect it from the various tenants including himself or as the kabuliyat puts it "from the tenants of the village and from my own tahvil." These figures correspond exactly with the jama wasilbaki papers made up by Biseswar Lal in the presence of the tenants and the old landlords' agent. The inference is, to my mind, irresistible that the appellant recognised the ticcadar as the tenant of a holding in the village and it is not contended that he had any other holding. It is necessary, therefore, to see how the appellant explains the clause in the kabuliyat. He says that when the old ticca lease expired he permitted the Factory to remain in possession as ticcadar by an oral agreement, with Mr. Hamilton Hudson, at that time the manager, and that the annual rent was to be Rs. 575 for the years 1303 and 1304 F. This, he says, was done without going into any accounts and presumably was not based upon the actual amount due or which would become due from the tenants, and which as appears from the wasilbaki papers was a varying quantity each year. It is significant that the sum so arrived at should be the exact figure which at the end of the period turned out to be the actual rent recoverable. It is also significant that Mr. Hamilton Hudson whose evidence was taken in January 1917 about a month before the appellant himself was examined was not asked a word in cross-examination as to any such oral agreement although the appellant was present in Court at the time. I confess that this latter consideration should not be given too much weight, as in the present case it is a regrettable fact that the Vakils on either side, either through lack of instructions or for some other reason, failed to elicit from the witnesses both in examination and cross examination evidence on many matters which it was manifestly desirable to elucidate. It is the more regrettable as Mr. H. W. Hudson who was then the proprietor of the Factory was dead and unable to give evidence. The appellant further says that Matuk Lal did realise Rs. 138 from tenants for the year 1303 F. and that he paid him a balance of Rs. 382 making Rs. 520 altogether as the rent for that year. He presumably treated Matuk Lal, his vendor, as entitled to the income for that year, the consideration-money not having been paid until about the end of 1303 F. This story is quite inconsistent with the clause just cited from the kabuliyat. The Rs. 1,150 is there stated to be the rent due from the tenants and payable to the landlords, whereas, if the Factory was in fact the ticcadar for those years under an agreement, oral or otherwise, the ticcadar alone would be responsible to the landlords and would take his chance of collecting the raiyati rents. It would not concern the landlord as long as he was paid the ticca rent whether the ticcadar could recover from the tenants or not Further, as this risk would be on the ticcadar, it is difficult to suppose that he would have made no attempt to collect any rents from the tenants during the intervening period and again we find that such rents as were paid, viz, Rs. 138 were paid not to the ticcadar but to the landlord Matuk Lal and this is not disputed. This sum the appellant says was collected in small sums from various tenants not including Mr. Hudson and produces a document in support of this which I shall refer to in a moment. The appellant's story cannot be reconciled with the stipulation as to the landlords' responsibility if the ticcadar should fail to collect the rents for 1303 F. If the oral agreement existed these rents were the ticcadar's affair and if he failed to collect them he alone would suffer the loss. The appellant in cross-examination contradicted the story he first told as to an oral lease for the two years in question and said that there was no oral lease for the second year. This, however, would not explain why he should assume any responsibility for the failure to collect rents for the first year. He further says that neither Dwarka Lal nor Khub Lal were ever Patwaris for his predecessor. The only object that I can see for this manifest untruth is to cast discredit on some of the documents relied on by the respondents. I am quite unable to assent his story and think that the Subordinate Judge and Mullick, J., were amply justified in rejecting it. It is admitted that the sum of Rs. 138 was paid to Matuk Lal and that the appellant was so informed by him. I am satisfied that this sum was paid by the Factory on account of rent for the holding. Now, having regard to the fact that Matuk Lal was aware of the payment of Rs. 138, as he communicated this fact to the purchasers, can it for a moment be doubted that he at least well knew the source from which it came? Matuk Lal is dead and Mr. Hudson, the proprietor of the Factory in 1897, is dead and direct evidence as to Matuk Lal's information is not before us. But it must be remembered that this rent was accepted by Matuk Lal and credited in account between himself and his purchaser. It was important for him to know at that time exactly which, if any, of his tenants had made any payments. In my opinion the proper inference to draw is that Matuk Lal knew that the Factory had paid this sum as a tenant at a time when they had no ticca lease. In any case, I think the onus would rest upon him and upon his successors to rebut the inference and this they have failed to do. In fact, the document Exhibit K made in the presence of Matuk Lal's agent corroborates the inference that Matuk Lal had knowledge. When the payment of the Rs. 138 was made in April 1896 Matuk Lal was still in possession and the ownership in the property had not, in my opinion, passed from him. The sale under the deed of the 13th July 1895 to the plaintiffs was to be in consideration of the purchase price and on receipt of the consideration-money in cash, but the consideration never passed until the following August and I can see no reason why, if Matuk Lal who still remained the owner, recognised the Factory as tenant, this should not bind his transferee if and when the latter should ultimately complete the sale.

Unless Matuk Lal deliberately deceived the purchasers, they also must have known the source from which the rent was derived. Moreover, the kabuliyat, in my opinion, establishes the fact that the appellant knew that Mr. Hudson had a holding in the village. A receipt, Exhibit 7, given by Matuk Lal to the appellant for Rs. 3-2 on the 29th August 1896 when the balance of the purchase-money was paid was relied on by the appellant. It shows the total rent due for the year 1303 F. as Rs. 520 of which Rs. 138 had already been received. There is nothing to show how the Rs. 520 was arrived at. The document came into existence before the wasil-baki papers (Exhibit K) was made up and the sum of Rs. 520 may have been a rough estimate made by Matuk Lal. Exhibit K shows that the rent for that year, including Rs. 194 14-0 payble for the disputed holding, was in round figures Rs. 557. This sum includes the profits of the mango trees, salt sayer and other items which varied from year to year, and it may well be that the Rs. 520 was an estimate based upon insufficient material. It may, on the other hand, be, as suggested by the learned Counsel for the appellants, the ticca rent of Rs. 500 with the added sum of Rs. 20 for rental of the holding of Haji Gowsan Mian not included in the ticca. There is nothing in this document which contradicts the respondents' story and it shows at least that Rs. 138 had been collected by Matuk Lal from tenants, etc. The appellant also produced a document, Exhibit 8, which he says he received at the same time from Matuk Lal and which shews details of collections from 36 tenants amounting to Rs. 126 7 3 for the year 1303 F. which, together with a verbal loan made to Haji Gowsan Mian, the gomasta of Matuk Lal, of Rs. 12-2-3, makes Rs. 135-9-6. It also shows how this sum has been spent in payment of Government revenue and cesses. This is relied upon as indicating that Rs. 138 had been collected from tenants other than the ticcadar. How it came into existence is not explained and the writer was not called; nor were any of the tenants called to say that they had paid the sums attributed to them although one of them at least was present in Court at the trial. No one takes any responsibility for it and it is not signed by any one. Moreover, the sum stated therein as collected from tenants is not Rs. 138, the admitted amount, but Rs. 126-7-3. In the circumstances, I think, it would be very dangerous and indeed impossible to rely upon this document as proving anything at all.

There are, however, certain other features appearing in the kabuliyat of 897 which have been urged upon our attention by the learned Counsel for the appellant and which he contends are inconsistent with the conclusion that his client recognised Mr. Hudson as his tenant. The second paragraph of the kabuliyat reads: "I have obtained ticca patta of the whole and entire 8-annas of the Collectorate partitioned patti including 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs of zerait land lying as per boundaries given below in Mauza Etwarpur Jainti," and towards the end of the document there is a covenant in these words: 'In Assin 1312 F. S. I will cut down the indigo crops that may be standing on the zerat lands on payment of 10-annas instalment of rent, and without waiting for any notice I will relinquish possession of the lease-hold property and in that circumstance I shall have no right to interfere in the lease-hold property nor shall I have any right to occupancy in the zerait lands, etc."

As already stated, the use of the words "zerait land" in the earlier part of the document is quite consistent with the same having been the Factory's indigo zerait over which they had a right of occupancy, and, if this land were excluded from the patta, the raiyati rent for the same, if the ticcadar was occupier, would be payable in addition to the ticca rent. There had been some negotiation as to exclusion of a portion of these lands and it was, therefore, natural to find their inclusion expressly mentioned although perhaps it was not strictly necessary as they would be included unless excluded. It is not contended, however, that the expression zerait means landlords' private land and the suggestion that the land in suit was ever landlords' zerait within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act was abandoned in argument before us. It had never in fact been in the landlords' cultivation. It might, on the other hand, be argued with much greater plausibility that, as the disputed land was never landlord's zerait, the use of the term is an admission that the land was indigo zerait in the private cultivation of the Factory as a tenant, there being no suggestion that it was cultivated by any one else. The use of the term is certainly not, in my opinion, any admission by the ticcadar that the land in suit was landlords' zerait. The point made, however, is that the covenant to relinquish possession of the lease-hold property and claim no right of occupancy in the zerait lands at the termination of the tenancy as well as to pay 10-annas instalment of rent for cutting the crops on the zerait land in Assin 1312 F. S. is quite inconsistent with the claim of an occupancy right on such land, and negatives the suggestion of recognition. If the covenant could be interpreted as referring only to the 36 bighas mentioned at the beginning of the document and to nothing else, even though such an undertaking would in law not bind the ticcadar to relinquish his occupancy holding, if he had one, it might indicate that Mr. Hudson was not at the time putting forward any claim to an occupancy holding at all, and that his attitude was inconsistent with that of a person asserting such a claim. It is not, however, necessary to interpret this undertaking as having any reference to the zerait land mentioned in the beginning of the document. And, having regard to the context, the undertaking may equally well be satisfied by reference to what immediately precedes it. It is immediately before provided that if the ticcadar should have to sue the tenants for arrears of rent and sell their lands in execution of decrees and purchase them, or if he should acquire occupancy rights in any way, then, after the expiry of the ticca, he will give up possession without objection; that the ticcadar will not obtain from any tenant kurtaola patta or any deed for any term beyond the term of this deed, and, if he should do so, it will be deemed invalid and intructuous after the expiry of the term of this patta; that within the mahal he will not purchase the entire occupancy holding or any portion of it and if he does so it will pass into the possession of the landlords as their zerait land. Then follows the passage quoted above. Now, stipulations of this nature are extremely common in such leases and are meant to protect the landlord from the acquisition by the ticcadar of occupancy rights during the currency of the lease which would bind the landlord on its termination. They merely express what the law implies but they are, nevertheless, in common use. One finds in the ticca pattas of 1851 and 1853 granted by Manik Lal and Sheo Prasad to Nathu Lal Choudhury a stipulation as to payment of a proportionate amount of 10-annas instalment of rent for cutting the crops on the khud kasht land after the termination of the lease, at a time when it is clearly proved that Nathu Lal had admittedly an occupancy right in the disputed holding of at least eight bighas. As these leases were renewed no question could arise as to whether the undertaking covered crops on the ticcadar's occupancy holding. There is no express covenant in those leases for relinquishing the lands at the termination of the lease but although such a covenant is usual it is unnecessary. It is not contended that the covenant to give up possession is legally enforceable in respect of any lands over which the ticcadar had an occupancy right, and, therefore, it seems to me that it was intended to apply and apply only to the land that might be acquired during the currency of the lease in any of the ways mentioned immediately above and which land is referred to as zerait. This applies equally to the covenant to pay the 10-annas instalment of rent. Whether the covenant could be enforced in respect of the disputed land depends entirely upon whether the ticcadar's right of occupancy existed or not and the covenant itself cannot, in my opinion, legitimately be read as an acknowledgment of the absence of such a right.

The appellant further relies upon the presumption in his favour arising from the Record of Rights which was finally published in April 1896 and which describes the disputed land as bakasht of the ticcadar but not zerait. If we are satisfied that there was an acknowledgment of the occupancy interest by the landlord in 1897 the Record of Rights becomes immaterial. It is relied on, however, to show that, during the preparation of the record and up to 1896, there was apparently no claim by the Factory or Mr. Hudson to have the lands recorded as the Factory's occupancy holding. The reason for this, I think, is not far to seek. From 1894 up to 1897 there were repeated changes in the management of the Factory. In 1894 Harry Hudson, a young man of 24, without much experience was manager. At the end of 1896 or beginning of 1897 Mr. Hamilton Hudson (E H. Hudson) took over charge. It was the first occasion on which he had independent charge of a Factory and he was quite new to the work. He was followed sixteen months later by Percy Hudson, also a young man without previous experience. The Survey and Record of Rights was the first in Bihar and it can hardly be a matter of surprise if these inexperienced Factory managers failed to attach to such proceedings the same importance as one would now after 25 years experience of the utility and value of Survey Records. It is, therefore, not suprising to find that the entry in the record was allowed to go unchallenged at the time.

One other document was also much relied on by the appellant, viz, the Road Cess Return dated the 27th October 1902. This document was prepared by Beni Prasad Singh the Am-Mukhtar of Mr. Hudson. It consists of two parts. The first part should contain details of lands in the actual occupation and cultivation of the person submitting the return whilst the second part should contain details of land held by cultivating raiyats paid direct by the persons submitting the Return. At first sight, therefore, part I ought to contain details of the disputed land in the actual occupation and cultivation of the ticcadar on whose behalf the Return is made whereas it seems, at all events, doubtful whether it could properly be entered under part II. The disputed land was in fact entered in part I as well as 2 bighas 9 cottas of another tenant which was apparently under the direct cultivation of the ticcadar. There is a note, however, in small print at the bottom of part I to this effect- "In the body of the statement should be entered only nij jote land and such uncultivated lands in the use and occupation of the maker of the Return as are capable of assessment on their annual value." It is contended that by making this Return the ticcadar acknowledged that the land in suit was nij jote land or, at all events, that it is evidence indicating that he considered it as such. According to section 116 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, proprietors' private lands are known in Bangal as Kamar, nij or nij jote and in Bihar as zerait, nij, sir, or kamat. It is argued from this that the inclusion of the disputed land in part I of the Road Cess Return must be taken as having been made after due deliberation and with full knowledge of the exact phraseology of the sections of the Bengal Tenancy Act. I am quite unable to attach any importance to this entry. The land had to be entered in one or other of the schedules and even if it was placed in the wrong schedule according to the instructions at the bottom of the page it was a very natural mistake to make. It is a mistake also, if it be such, which applied to the 2 bighas 9 cottas of the other tenant's land and it is not suggested that this was landlords' zerait. The document was put in on behalf of the plaintiff and it was not drawn to the attention of any of the defendants' witnesses nor were they asked to explain it. It may well be that just as the word "zerait" in Bihar is an apt term to designate indigo zerait, so the ticcadar, if he thought about it at all, considered that nij jote which is a synonym for zerait had the same significance. It is, moreover, nobody's case that the land is nij jote in the sense in which it is used in the Bengal Tenancy Act and this document, in my opinion, affords no evidence from which any inference can be drawn. In the Road Cess Return, dated the 19th November 1912, also put in by the appellant, under the heading of "area of the zerait and the bakasht lands" is entered 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs zerait which negatives the suggestion that the disputed land was bakasht. That Return was made before the last ticca lease expired and indicates that at that time, at all events, the ticcadar considered the disputed land as such.

In the view I take as to the recognition of Mr. Hudson as an occupancy tenant in 1857 it is not strictly necessary to determine whether Nathu Lal's occupancy right was included in the conveyance of the 23rd July 1880 although I have already expressed my opinion upon this point. It is clear that Nathu Lal after 1880 made no attempt to exercise any rights of occupancy over the land or to dispute his transferee's claim thereto. It is equally clear that in 1857 the Factory was in possession and asserting a right of occupancy and if my conclusion is accurate that the occupancy right in the Factory was then recognised it is immaterial whether it passed by the conveyance from Nathu Lal.

In my opinion the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

DAS, J.—I regret that I am unable to agree with my Lord the Chief Justice. The important events connected with this litigation have all been stated by my Lord, and I do not purpose to recapitulate them.

On the arguments that have been advanced before us, three important questions arise for consideration; first, did Nathu Lal purchase 34 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs of occupancy holding and was his purchase recognised by Sunder Sahay the then landlord? Secondly, did Nathu Lal convey these lands to Mr. Hudson by the indenture dated the 23rd July 1850; and thirdly, was Mr. Hudson recognised as an occupancy tenant in respect of these lands by the plaintiff who had purchased the interest of Matuk Lal, the successor in title of Sunder Sahay?

In regard to the first question, the defendants base their case upon Exhibit E, a letter dated the 19th December 1862, alleged to have been written and addressed by Sunder Sahay to Nathu Lal and upon the zamabandis of Sunder Sahay, Exhibits H, H1, H2 and H3. They also rely upon Exhibit D and Exhibit 22, the former as establishing the genuineness of Exhibit E and the latter as strongly corroborating their case as to recognition. The plaintiff denies the genuineness of Exhibits E, D and H, H1, H2 and H3. As to Exhibit 22, he says that, far from corroborating the case of the defendants, it completely destroys it.

As may be anticipated, the main arguments of the parties were directed to the letter, Exhibit E on which the defendants strongly rely. The defendants' case is that Nathu Lal obtained a transfer of these occupancy holdings in his favour sometime between 1271 (September 1863 to September 1864) and 1272 (September 1864 to September 1865) and that the transfer was distinctly recognised by the landlord by his letter dated the 19th December 1865. It is this letter which has been challenged as a forgery by the plaintiff.

In my opinion it is necessary to see whether the jamabandis Exhibits H, H1, H2 and H3, can be regarded as genuine documents. If they can be so regarded, then there is no reason to reject the letter Exhibit D as a forgery, since the jamabandis clearly establish that Nathu Lal was a tenant in respect of 34 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs of land at a rental of Rs. 197-14-0. In order, again, to see whether the jamabandis can be accepted as genuine, it will be necessary to consider them in connection with the Batwara Khasra, Exhibit 22, which was the Khasra of a Collectorate partition between Sunder Sahay and his co-sharers. If the jamabandis can stand the test of the comparison with Exhibit 22, the Batwara Khasra, then the defendants' case on the first point urged by the parties must succeed.

I propose then to consider the jamabandis, Exhibits H, H1, H2 and H3 and the Batwara Khasra, Exhibit 22, at the outset. These jamabandis, which, it must be remembered, were Sunder Sahay's private papers and should have been produced from the custody of Sunder Sahay's heirs, were in fact produced in Court by one Baldeo Lal, son of Khub Lal, who was the nephew of Dwarka Lal, the Patwari of Sunder Sahay. Baldeo Lal admits that he has an uncle who looks after the business of the family, but he says that he "got" these papers "away" and that they have been in his custody. These jamabandis are for the years 1271 (September 1863 to September 1864), 1273 (1865-1866), 1277 (1869-1870) and 1281 (1873 to 1874), respectively. They purport to show that in 1273 Rs. 197-14-0 was realised as rent from Nathu Lal in respect of 34 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs of land. They also purport to show that between 1271 and 1273 there was a reduction of area held by five tenants, Bilaki Kalwar, Doma Sahu, Bhikhari Rabut, Bikan Teli and Adham Dhanuk to the extent of 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs for which they became entitled to a reduction of rent amounting in all to Rs. 107 3 8. These jamabandis, therefore, strongly corroborate the letter Exhibit E upon which reliance is placed by the defendants; but, in my opinion, there are conclusive reasons for holding that these jamabandis are not genuine. I have already referred to the mode of their production in Court. It is certainly a remarkable coincidence that the jamabandis of the most critical period in the history of the Factory in relation to the disputed lands should have been "got away" by Baldeo Lal. The jamabandis purport to be the jamabandis of the privately partitioned estate of Sunder Sahay. It is relevant to enquire whether there was a private partition between Sunder Sahay and his co-sharers for, if there was not, then it is impossible to rely upon the jamabandis. Now, it is admitted that in 1868 there was a Collectorate partition between Sunder Sahay and his co-sharers, and that on such partition, an 8-annas share of the village, including the lands in dispute, was allotted to Sunder Sahay as a separate touz.; but it is contended by the defendants that prior to the Collectorate partition, there was a private partition between the parties and that the Collectorate partition did nothing more than confirm the private partition which had already been effected by the parties. The plaintiff's case is that in 1864 Sundar Sahay was not the sole proprietor of the village; he had only an 8-annas share in it, the remaining 8-annas being in the possession of certain other persons. He contends that a separate estate was allotted to Sunder Sahay only in 1868 by the Collectorate partition and that accordingly the jamabandis produced by the defendants must be rejected as forged and fabricated documents, the reason for the forgery being to support the case of the defendants that in 1864 Sunder Sahay had a separate estate and was competent to recognise Nathu Lal as an occupancy tenant in respect of the lands in dispute. It is material then to consider, as I have already stated, whether there was a private partition between Sunder Sahay and his co-sharers prior to the admitted Collectorate partition of 1868.

Now, the batwara khasra, Exhibit 22, shows that all the co sharers were applicants for the partition and that a field to field survey of the entire Mauza took place before the partition was effected between the parties. The partition took place under Regulation XIX of 1814, which was the Statute in force in 1868 respecting the partition of estates paying revenue to Government. Section 4 of the Regulation required the applicants to state in their application to the Collector that they were desirous to have separate possession of their respective shares, and it was necessary to have their applications attested by four credible witnesses. It seems to me incredible that, having effected a private partition, Sunder Sahay and his co-sharers, for no reason whatever, should solemnly go to the Collector and ask for a Collectorate partition. Cases constantly come before the Court where after a private partition a party who has been prejudiced by the private partition applies before the Collector for a Collectorate partition, concealing entirely the fact of the private partition between the parties; but then those parties who have not been similarly prejudiced by the private partition dispute the right of the applicant to claim a Collectorate partition and the first question which the Collectorate has to determine is, whether there has, in fact, been a private partition between the parties But this was not a case of this nature. Here all the parties were applicants for a Collectorate partition and it is relevant to enquire why they should solemnly have asked for a Collectorate partition if in fact there was already a private partition between them and if the object of the Collectorate partition was merely to confirm the private partition which had already been effected between them. This is not all; the document, Exhibit 22, shows, as I have already pointed out, that there was a field to field survey of the entire Mauza. This certainly suggests the inference that there was not a private partition between the parties. The arguments of the defendants involve this, that not only did Sunder Sahay and his co sharers go through the expense and the trouble of a wholly unnecessary Collectorate partition, since they were already in possession of their respective shares, but that they made false declarations in their petition to the Collectorate and were supported in their false declarations by four credible witnesses. Under section 12 a creditable Ameen was to be appointed to make a division who was to receive a percentage on the amount of the jama of the whole estate for his trouble and the expenses of establishment. Section 17 contained comprehensive rules under which the proprietors were required to furnish the Ameen with the accounts on the gross produce of each village, and all other accounts and information requisite to enable him to assess the public revenue on each of the estates into which the property was to be divided. The third of these rules required the proprietor to cause the Patwaris and other Zemindari officers to attend the Ameen to explain the accounts and furnish him with such information as he may require for dividing the estate and apportioning the public jama. It is not necessary to go through the various sections of the Regulation; it is sufficient to say that various proceedings had to be taken before the partition could be effected and that these proceedings had to be taken in the presence of the proprietors and their Patwaris.

Exhibit 22, as I have mentioned, is the measurement khasra of the partition, and the opening words are as follows:—"Certified copy of khasra showing measurement plot by plot of the fields of each tenant of Manza Etwarpur Jainti prepared in 1868 on the application of Sunder Sahay, share holding proprietor of 8 annas, Raghubans Sahay, Jadubans Sahay, Narain Sahay, Shankar Sahay, Maharaj Kumar, Babu Tapeswar Singh, defendants, in the presence of Khaderan Mahto, Jath Raiyat, Udharan Pashai, Gorait of the entire 16 annas, Dwarka Lal karpardaz of the applicant No. 1 Jitulal, karpardaz of defendants and under the supervision of Lala Shimbhu Dayal, partition Ameen, and Juniat Raot, Chairman, with a Lugga of 6 cubits and 6 Angals on the 4th December 1868." It ought to be pointed out that, though Raghubans Sahay and the others are described in the opening words as defendants, that was only so because the proceedings required an applicant and opposite parties; the khasra itself shows that all the parties were applicants for the partition. Now, it will be noticed that Sunder Sahay was described in 1868 as the share holding proprietor of 8 annas. That was his statement to the Collector in 1868 and it was on the footing of this statement that partition was effected between the parties. It is impossible to accept the jamabandis of a date prior to 1868 in so far as they describe Sunder Sahay as the sole proprietor of a privately partitioned patti. In the second place, it may be asked, why was the measurement of the fields of each tenant with the help of an Ameen and chainman necessary, if in fact the parties had already effected a partition between themselves and the object of the Collectorate partition was merely to confirm the private partition? In my opinion, it is difficult, if not impossible, to credit the story of a private partition.

Now, it is obvious that the jamabandis were not and could not have been produced before the Ameen as they should have been under the Batwara regulation. Their mere production would have disclosed to the Collector that there was already a private partition between them; and, as a matter of fact, these documents do not bear the seal of the Collector as they should if they had been produced in the batwara proceedings of 1868. Lastly, a comparison of the jamabandis for 1277 (September 1869 to September 1870) with the measurement khasra will demonstrate the utter impossibility of relying on the jamabandis as genuine documents. The measurement khasra in connection with the Collectorate partition was prepared on the 4th December 1868, and it was prepared, as the document Exhibit 22 shows, in the presence of Jeth Raiyat and the Gorait of the entire 16 annas and Dwarka Lal the karpardaz of Sunder Sahay. The jamabandi for 1277 also bears the name of Dwarka Lal as the Patwari of Sunder Sahay. As I have said before and as the document shows, the khasra was the result of the measurement plot by plot of each tenant, and the presence of the Jeth Raiyat, the Gorait, and Dwarka Lal guaranteed the correctness of the statements made in the khasra. The khasra must, in my opinion, be accepted as correctly stating the facts as they existed in December 1868. The jamabandi for 1277 is the jamabandi for the year immediately after the partition and ought to substantially agree with the measurement khasra; but, as a matter of fact, there is far greater conflict than agreement between the two documents. We find, for instance, 51 tenants assigned to Sunder Sahay by the partition of 1868. Now, if the jamabandi for 1277 (September 1869 to September 1870) be a genuine document, then we would expect to find the names of these 51 tenants in that jamabandi but, as a matter of fact, that jamabandi shows that Sunder Sahay had only 33 tenants. Lest it should be argued that there may have been transfer of interests between December 1868 and December 1869, I ought to point out that all the transfers that did take place are shown in the jamabandi and afford no explanation whatever for the conflict that exists between the two documents. The first column in the jamabandi gives the old area of the tenants, and the second column the old rent. These two columns simply carry forward the results from the jamabandi for the previous years. The third and fourth columns give the reduction in area and the reduction in amount of rent respectively, and show the transfer of interests that may have taken place since the preparation of the jamabandi for the preceding year. The fifth and sixth columns give the balance of area and the balance of amount of rent respectivaly and are designed to show the interest still retained by the tenant after taking note of the transfers that may have taken place. The seventh and eighth columns give the present area and the present amount of rent of the transferees. In the jamabandi for 1277 we find only two such transfers. The ninth and the tenth columns give the total area and total amount and purport to give the exact position after taking note of the transfers. The first column in the jamabandi for 1277 ought to state the position correctly as to the total area held by the tenants in 1276. In other words, the first column in the jamabandi for 1277 ought to be a mere reproduction of the ninth column of the jamabandi for 1276, the year of the Collectorate partition between the parties. We have not the jamabandi for 1276 before us, but we are entitled to assume that the first column of the jamabandi for 1277 has correctly reproduced the ninth column of the jamabandi for 1276. But then there ought to be no conflict between the first column of the jamabandi for 1277 and the list of tenants as is to be found in the batwara khasra; and there is all the less reason for the conflict since we know that the khasra was prepared by the Collector's agent in the presence of the agents of the landlord and the tenants, and, as was required by the Statute, on an examination of the jamabandi kept by the landlord and on an exhaustive local inspection. The conflict between the two documents is far more serious as I shall presently show. There are no less than seventeen names mentioned in the first column of the jamabandi for 1277 which do not appear in the batwara khasra at all. There are no less than 34 names mentioned in the batwara khasra as tenants of Sunder Sahay who find no place in the jamabandi for 1277. When the two documents are critically examined and compared, it will be found that there are only 17 names common to the two documents. But the most remarkable conflict arises in regard to the position of the Factory The jamabandis both for 1273 and 1277 show that the Factory was recorded as tenants in respect of 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs of land; and indeed the respondents strongly rely on these jamabandis in support of their case of recognition. Now, if the jamabandis are genuine documents, and if Dwarka Lal, Patwari, the Jeth Raiyat and the Gorait were all aware of the rights of the Factory, and if the partition was effected on a field to field survey of the entire area, we would expect to find the Factory mentioned in the batwara khasra as holding 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs of land. The batwara khasra, however, shows that there were 38 bighas 19 cottas $\frac{3}{4}$ dhurs of indigo zerait land of which 8 bighas 6 cottas 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ dhurs were in the possession of the Factory. The position is shown with such clearness and precision in the batwara khasra that it is impossible, in my opinion, to make any mistake about it. I cannot regard the argument as serious that, wherever any land is shown in the batwara khasra as indigo zerait, it must be assumed that it was the occupancy holding of the Factory for that there is no substance in the batwara khasra, since it also shows the occupancy holdings of the Factory. In my opinion, the batwara khasra establishes conclusively that on partition between the parties an area of 30 bighas 12 cottas 13$\frac{1}{4}$ dhurs of indigo land was allotted to Sunder Sahay as his share of what would now be called bakasht lands. They are described in the document as zerait lands; but it must be remembered that the word 'bakasht' did not come into use till much later, and the description of 30 bighas 12 cottas 13$\frac{1}{2}$ dhurs of land as indigo zerait lands indicated that these lands were allotted to Sunder Sahay as his share of the private lands for direct cultivation by him. I have myself no doubt as to what the true position was. Nathu Lal had 8 bighas 6 cottas 9$\frac{1}{2}$ dhurs of tenancy lands within the touzi that was allotted to Sunder Sahay. Sunder Sahay the proprietor had 30 bighas 12 cottas 13$\frac{1}{4}$ dhurs of what would now be called bakasht lands. In course of time 2 bighas 11 cottas 15$\frac{3}{4}$ dhurs of the bakast lands of Sunder Sahay were converted into tenancy lands. When Nathu Lal subsequently took a pacca lease of the touzi he came into direct possession of the bakasht lands of Sunder Sahay. He amalgamated his tenancy holdings with the bakasht lands of Sunder Sahay and treated the entire area of 36 bighas 7 cottahs 11 dhurs of land as his tenancy holdings. In order to strengthen his position with reference to these lands and in order to meet a subsequent attack upon his title as to the lands other than 8 bighas 6 cottahs 9½ dhurs as to which he had a good title he fabricated Exhibit E and the jamabandis in order to make it appear that there was a private partition between the parties antecedent to the Collectorate partition and that Sunder Sahay was competent to and did in fact recognise him as an occupancy tenant in respect of the entire area. In my opinion, the jamabandis cannot be regarded as genuine and I hold on an examination of the batwara khasra that in 1868 all that Nathu Lal had was 8 bighas 6 cottas 9½ dhurs of occupancy holdings.

I now come to the letter, Exhibit E, which is strongly relied upon by the defendants. It is, in my opinion, always dangerous to come to any conclusion on the question of forgery on a mere comparison of the writing in a disputed document with the writings in admitted documents. The plaintiff relies upon the admitted signature of Sunder Sahay in Exhibits 4, 14 and 14A and contends that a mere comparison of the signature of Sunder Sahay in Exhibit E with his admitted signatures in Exhibit 4, 14, and 14A will demonstrate that his signature in Exhibit E has been forged. That the style of the signature in Exhibit E is different from the style in Exhibits 4, 14 and 14A can admit of no doubt whatever. The learned Subordinate Judge concedes that the signature in Exhibit E is much larger than the signatures in the admitted documents; but he thinks that there is no essential difference. Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad, with his knowledge of the Persian script, has recorded an unhesitating finding to the effect that "the signature in Exhibit E is widely different from his admitted signature in the other documents" I attach very great importance to the view which has been expressed in this Court by Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad, but I prefer to rest my decision on the unimpeachable evidence furnished by the letter itself.

The letter runs as follows:—"I have on your application recognized you as cultivator of 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs of occupancy holding having annual jama of Rs. 197 14.0 including rent and the road-cess to be levied by the Government in future lying in Mauza Etwarpur Jainti constituting my proprietary interest, that you have purchased from the tenants of the village Yours sincerely, Sundar Sahay, bakalam khud (by my own pen)." Mr. Hasan Imam has argued that the inclusion of road-cess to be levied by the Government in future in the jama of Rs 197-14-0 is highly suspicious because admittedly the first of the Road Cess Acts was not introduced till the 3rd June 1871. That may be so, but it may well be that legislation as to the imposition of a road-cess was in the contemplation of the Government for many years prior to the actual introduction of the Bill in the Council and I would not be prepared to hold that the letter has been forged merely on the ground that there is a reference in it to the road cess to be levied by the Government in future. But it is impossible to rely upon the letter in so far as it asserts, first, that the Mauza was his proprietary interest, and, secondly, he had recognised Nathu Lal as his occupancy tenant in respect of 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs of land purchased by Nathu Lal from the tenants. I have shown from the batwara khasra that the Mauza did not constitute the proprietary interest of Sunder Sahay in 1 64 and I have also shown that Nathu Lal had only 8 bighas 6 cottas 9½ dhurs of occupancy holdings in 1868. There is another point in connection with this letter which is worthy of our consideration, the use of the expression 'bakalam khud' to convey the idea that the signature in the letter was made by his own pen. Now, there are two expressions which may be used to convey the same idea; 'bakalam khud' and bakalam khas.' In the documents which bear the admitted signatures of Sunder Sahay, the expression used is bakalam khas. This is the only document in which the other expression is used. The view of the learned Subordinate Judge is that "bakalam khas" which is an idiomatic expression may have been written at the suggestion of better scholars than himself and "bakalam khud" of his own motion." I am wholly unconvinced by the argument which has been employed by the learned Subordinate Judge. One of the most useful tests in considering a case of forgery is to see whether a clear dissimilarity of habit can be traced through the documents tendered. If there exists such a dissimilarity, then it is difficult to say that the same person wrote them all. The judicial mind has constantly taken advantage of the characteristic peculiarities of individulas when a question has been raised whether their writings have been forged, such peculiarities being most commonly manifested in the formation of an idea or in the mode of spelling particular words. The test is a useful one and there is no reason why we should not apply it here. Having anxiously considered the internal evidense furnished by the letter itself in the light of admitted facts and circumstances as to which there can be no dispute whatever, and giving due weight to the opinion of Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad, I have come to the conclusion that Exhibit E is not genuine and ought not to be relied upon. Exhibit D stands on no better footing. It purports to be a list of documents kept by Nathu Lal and is dated the 14th January 1869. If, as I hold, Exhibit E is not a genuine document, I cannot rely upon Exhibit D at all. The important questions which arise in connection both with Exhibit D and Exhibit E are these; first, whether Sunder Sahay was the sole proprietor of an estate in 1864? And, secondly, whether in 1864 Nathu Lal did have 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs as his occupancy holdings? The admitted Collectorate partition in 1868 and the batwara khasra, Exhibit 12, clearly establish that Sunder Sahay was not the sole proprietor of the estate in 1864 and that in 1864 Nathu Lal could not have had 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhur of occupancy holdings. The batwara khasra not being open to any suspicion whatever it must follow that any document which contradicts the batwara khasra cannot stand. I hold that Nathu Lal did not have 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs of occupancy holding.

The next question is, assuming Nathu Lal acquired occupancy rights in these lands, did he convey these rights to Hudson by the Indenture dated the 23rd July 1890. The operative words here are, "all and every the said Talooks, Manzas and lands or parts or shares therein of which the particulars are contained in the said schedule hereto and also all other if any the hereditaments and property belonging to or forming part of or held with the said Talooks, Manzas and lands.....and all manner of rights liberties easements privileges profits and commodities emoluments advantages and appurtenses whatsoever to the said Talooks Manzas land Indigo Concern and hereditaments belonging to or in anywise appertaining or therewith usually held used occupied possessed or enjoyed....." It is conceded that the particulars of the disputed lands are not to be found in the schedule of the "Talooks Manzas and lands" annexed to the deed of conveyance; but it is argued first, that they fall within the description "and also all other if any the hereditaments and property belonging to or forming part of or held with the said Talooks, Manzas and lands;" and secondly, that they are covered by the conveyance of "all manner of rights liberties easements privileges profits commodities emoluments advantages and appurtenances whatsoever to the said Talooks Manzas land Indigo Concern and hereditaments belonging to or in anywise appertaining or therewith usually held used occupied possessed or enjoyed."

The latter argument is a short one and may be disposed of at once. I think it is well understood that the words upon which reliance is placed were intended to pass and in fact did pass only those rights which are known as incorporeal hereditaments, that is to say, such rights as are not accompanied by actual possession. But it was argued that a right of occupancy such as is claimed in the disputed lands is an incorporeal hereditament and must be deemed to have passed by the words employed. From one point of view Mr. Manuk is correct, for a right in the land is, in strictness, like any other right, incorporeal. The truth is that there always has been some confusion between the right of property and subject of property, a confusion which it was necessary for the conveyancers to avoid. It is, therefore, more relevant to enquire whether in conveyancing there is any distinction between corporeal and incorporeal hereditaments than whether logically there ought to be any distinction between them. Now, the old modes of conveyancing under which an estate accompanied by possession passed by livery, while future estates and other rights in land passed by grant, gave a practical rule for distinguishing between corporeal and incorporeal hereditaments. The old conveyancing test is now obsolete; but the distinction is still maintained, and such rights as are not accompanied by exclusive possession are classed amongst incorporeal hereditaments whereas those rights which entitle the owner to the present possession of the land or to receipt of rent and profit are classed as corporeal hereditaments. It is quite true that a right of occupancy, looked at from the point of view of right of property and not subject of property, is incorporeal in its nature; but the actual possession of the land, to which a person having a right of occupancy is entitled, attracts it to the class of corporeal hereditaments. I am of opinion that the disputed lands are not covered by the words upon which reliance has been placed by Mr. Manuk.

I have now to consider whether the disputed lands are covered by the words, "and also all other if any the hereditaments and property belonging to or forming part of or held with the said Talooks Manzas and lands." Now it will be noticed that the recital is far more specific and certain, in that it confines the operation of the deed to "the Talooks Manzas villages lands hereditaments and premises of which the particulars are set forth in the schedule." Prima facie, the operative part not only covers the Talooks, Manzas and lands or parts or shares therein of which the particulars are contained in the schedule, but extends the operation of the deed to "also all other land, if any, the hereditaments and property belonging to or forming part of or held with the said Talooks, Manzas and lands." The critical question is whether the operative part is so clear that it must prevail over the recital. It is quite true that the recitals in a conveyance are subordinate to the operative part and that, consequently, where the operative part is clear, it is treated as expressing the intention of the parties, and it prevails over any suggestion of a contrary intention afforded by the recitals; but it is well-established that where the operative part is doubtful and it is impossible to say, on a mere reading of it, to which properties it refers, then the recitals can and ought to be used to explain its meaning, and that while, for the purpose of construing the operative part, the whole of the instrument may be referred to, yet the recitals leading up to it are more likely to furnish the key to its true construction than the subsidiary clauses of the deed. For instance, parcels of a deed described with certainty are not cut down by recitals showing that something less was intended to pass; but the recitals assist the construction of the operative part where there is an ambiguity in the operative part as to the property affected.

The case of Walsh v. Trevanion (19) may be usefully considered in this connection. The deed, which was a marriage settlement, recited a mortgage to the Bank of England of certain of the lands belonging to the Trevanions and then it recited the intended marriage of Trevanion with Miss Trelawney, and it recited further that, "upon the treaty of the said intended marriage," it was "agreed that such of the hereditaments.....as are comprised in the said recited indentures of mortgage... ...should be settled to certain uses, etc." The deed then went on: "Now, therefore, for carrying into execution the said agreement.....they, the said.....Trevanions" direct limit and appoint that "the messuages or tenements, lands and other hereditaments, hereinafter granted, released and confirmed, or expressed as intended so to be," "shall be and remain (but subject and charged as hereinbefore is mentioned) to the uses, etc." It was agreed that, so far as the recitals went, only those properties belonging to the Trevanions; (father and son) which were subject to the mortgage in favour of the Bank of England were intended to be conveyed; but then the operative words were these: "All and singular the messuages, lands, tenements and other hereditaments of them the said.....Trevanion and..... Trevanion situate, lying and being within the manor of Carhaie, and also within the several parishes of St. Michael, Carhais, Cuby, Goran Probus, Veryan, St. Teath and St. Lenie, in the said County of Cornwall, and which are intended to be specified and described in the schedule hereunder written, but which schedule is not intended to abridge or affect the generality of the description hereinbefore expressed and contained." The schedule annexed to the deed specified and contained such of the messuages lands and hereditaments lying the manor of Carhais and the several parishes mentioned in the deed as were specified and contained in the schedule to the mortgage in favour of the Bank of England. The plaintiffs relied upon the recitals and the schedule and contended that such messuages, lands and hereditaments only as were mortgaged to the Bank of England, and no others, passed by the deed. The defendants, on the other hand, relied upon the operative part and especially upon the statement that the schedule was not intended to abridge or affect the generality of the expressions used in the operative part, and contended that all the messuages, lands and tenements situate lying and being within the manor of Carhais and several parishes mentioned passed, and not only such of them as were mortgaged to the Bank of England. Stopping here for a moment, I may ask myself the question, whether the words employed in the deed upon which reliance is placed by Mr. Manuk have any larger operation than the words upon which the defendants relied in the case cited. In the case before us, certain properties are conveyed by a schedule, and there is no conflict whatever between the recitals and the schedule; but then the deed conveys "also all other, if any, the hereditaments and property belonging to or forming part of or held with" the properties described in the schedule. In the case cited, the conveyance was also by a schedule which also agreed with the recitals; but then the deed provided that the schedule was not intended to abridge or affect the generality of the expressions used in the operative part. In my opinion, no distinction on principle can be drawn between the words on which the defendants in the case cited relied and the words upon which Mr. Manuk relies.

Patteson, J., delivering the judgment in the case thought that the rule of construction was this that, when the words, in the operative part of a deed were clear and unambiguous, they could not be controlled by the recitals or by the other parts of the deed; but that when these words were of a doubtful meaning, the recitals and other parts of the deed may be used as a test to discover the intention of the parties, and to fix the true meaning of those words. Taking, then, the words upon which the defendants relied, namely, "but which schedule is not intended to abridge or affect the generality of the expression hereinbefore expressed and contained," the learned Judge said as follows: "These words are not clear and unambiguous they may either include all the lands of the parties situate in the manor and parishes mentioned whether these lands be specified and described in the schedule or not, or they may include only such lands in the same manor and parishes as are virtually and in substance specified and described in the schedule, though they may be imperfectly and inaccurately so specified and described The latter meaning is the more sensible and probable one to be collected from the words used, independently of any supposed intention of the parties, or any other parts of the deed. At any rate, the former meaning is not clear and unambiguous. We must, therefore, look to the recitals and other parts of the deed; and when we do so, it is utterly impossible to doubt but that the parties intended to confine the operation of the deed to the lands which were in mortgage to the Bank of England."

Are the words on which Mr. Manuk relies any more clear and unambiguous than the words upon which the defendants relied in the case cited? They may include, on one interpretation, every bit of land lying within the ambit of the Taluks, Manzas and lands conveyed; but then the conveyance would include much that did not belong to the grantor, for instance, the occupancy holdings of tenants other than the grantor; or they may include only such lands in the properties conveyed as are virtually and in substance specified and described in the schedule though they may be imperfectly and inaccurately so specified and described. For instance, such tenancy lands as were purchased by the grantor during the subsistence of the ticcā and which became an accretion to the ticcā would pass under these words—though they may not have been specified in the schedule, if the ticcā itself was so specified. I am of opinion that the latter interpretation is correct, and that the words relied on were added for greater safety, in order to guard against any possible misapprehension as to the true position. But, if the latter interpretation is not correct, there is at least some ambiguity in the words employed. We are then entitled to look to the recital and other parts of the deed and when we do so, it is impossible to doubt but that the parties intended to confine the operation of the deed to the properties specified in the schedule.

Apart from any other consideration, I do not see how the occupancy holdings of a tenant can be said to belong to or form part of or be held with a ticcadari village It is only on the hypothesis that occupancy holdings purchased by a ticcadar prior to the commencement of the ticca do not belong to or form part of the ticca village that the ticcadar is entitled to retain the occupancy holdings on the expiry of the ticca. If they do belong to or form part of or are held with the ticcadari village, then there is no escape from the conclusion that they should be made over to the landlord on the expiry of the ticca lease. But in truth an occupancy holding forms a property by itself and is capable of being held and is in fact held distinct and apart from the estate, within the ambit of which it may happen to lie. Even a cursory examination of the Bengal Tenancy Act will establish this point. An occupancy holding is heritable; it is transferable with the consent of the landlord. The raiyat is entitled to cut down trees, provided there is no local custom to the contrary. Section 65 protects the tenant from ejectment for non-payment of rent, but allows the landlord to bring the holding to sale with the result that the surplus sale proceeds are available to the tenant. This is a clear recognition of property in the raiyat distinct and apart from the parent estate. Section 76 and section 77 entitle the raiyat to effect substantial improvements including the erection of a suitable dwelling-house for himself and his family. Section 85 authorizes sub letting subject to certain restrictions. Section 160 treats a right of occupancy as a protected interest not liable to be annulled by a purchaser of the superior tenure at a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent. The last mentioned section is itself a conclusive answer to the contention of Mr. Manuk; for, if an occupancy holding belonged to or formed part of or was held with a superior tenure, it is difficult to understand how it could exist as a separate property after the purchase of his superior tenure at a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent. I am of opinion that the words relied upon by Mr. Manuk did not pass the occupancy holdings in question and that Mr. Hudson did not acquire the disputed lands by the conveyance of the 23rd July 1890.

The last question is—Was Mr. Hudson recognized by the plaintiff as an occupancy tenant. Now, before dealing with the evidence on the point, it is well to examine the principles upon which the doctrine of recognition rests. When all the cases are analysed, it will be found that the doctrine is merely the application of the rules of acquiescence or waiver, preventing a party who has acquiesced in a state of things from turning round and alleging a different state of things. It is not an artificial rule entitling a person to the status of an occupancy tenant on mere proof that money paid by him has found its way to the landlord's pocket; but, as the rule is founded on reason and good sense it must be shown as a condition precedent for the applicability of the rule, that the landlord accepted the money as the rent of the holding and the person paying it as the occupier of the holding and as paying on his own account. [See the decision of the Judicial Committee in Nuba Kumari Deb v. Behari Lal Sen (20)]. It is well established that parties cannot be said to acquiesce in the claims of others unless they are fully cognizant of their right to dispute them, and that, where acquiescence is relied on, it must be shown that the person acquiescing was aware of the matter in which he acquiesced, and of the effect of such acquiescence. Recognition, like waiver, must be an intentional act with knowledge.

In the case of Mritunjoy v. Gopal Chunder (21) the facts were these: the holding stood in the name of Jobeeruddin and the landlord brought a rent suit against Jobeeruddin and caused the holding to be sold in execution of the decree which he obtained for arrears of rent. The plaintiff thereupon brought a suit for recovery of the holding on the allegation that he and Kalee Kumar had purchased the holding before the rent suit in which the holding was sold and had been recognized by the landlords as tenants. He proved several deposits of rent into the Collector's office in the joint names of Joheeruddin, Kalee Kumar and himself and he alleged that the landlord had withdrawn those rents from the Collector's office. On these facts, the Calcutta High Court had to consider the question whether there was a sufficient recognition of the tenancy of the plaintiff, and it had no difficulty in answering the question in the negative. The following passage from the judgment of Loch, J., may be usefully cited: "On referring, however, to the mode in which these deposits are entered, we find that they have been made in the joint names of Joheeruddin Mirtunjay (the plaintiff) and Kalee Kumar, but there is nothing to show what was the particular interest belonging to the plaintiff in the tenure.....nor is it shown to us that any notice in which the plaintiff claimed to be the purchaser of the tenure was served on the defendant; so that even if defendant have, as alleged, taken all the money in deposit, it is impossible to say that he took it knowing that plaintiff had any interest in the tenure, or that he was thereby admitting plaintiff's title as a tenant. We think that when a party wishes to make known to the Zamindar that he has a right to a tenure the rent of which the Zamindar refuses to take from him, he should distinctly state what is the interest he claims and the notice to the Zamindar should comprise this information. It is not sufficient for a man wishing to protect his special interests of which the Zamindar may have no knowledge, to put money into the Collector's office in the name of the recorded tenant along with his own, without stating what his claim is; for unless he do so, the Zamindar is not obliged to enquire as to his status. The payments as made by plaintiff might have been voluntary payments or payments such as that of a mortgage to save his own interest which a Zamindar is not bound to recognize."

The case of Robert Wilson v. Radha Dulari Kuer (22) is to the same effect. There a non-transferable holding was advertised for sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent and the judgment-debtor put in the money due under the decree stating that he had procured the money by selling his holding to the person who was subsequently cited as defendant No. 1 in the action by the landlord. The landlord took out the money out of Court and subsequently sued to eject the transferee. It was held that it could not be inferred from the above circumstance that the landlord had given his consent to the transfer, inasmuch as the plaintiff had a right to draw the money out of Court without regard to the manner in which or the source from which the judgment-debtor had procured it. In the case of Digbijoy Roy v. Ata Rahaman (23) the facts were these,—On the 17th March 1905, the plaintiff instituted a suit for rent against the tenant. On the 9th April 1908, the tenant filed a written statement in which he alleged that he had transferred his interest in the holding to the present defendant on the 26th March 1905. The transferee appeared in Court at the same time and prayed that he might be added as a defendant. The Court granted the application and the result was that the transferee was treated as a party defendant. On the same day the transferee made a payment of the amount claimed in the suit to the Pleader of the plaintiff who certified the payment to the Court, but it appears that, in his petition to the Court, the Pleader stated that he had received the rent from the transferee as agent of the tenant. It was not disputed that the sum paid to the Pleader was on that very day made over by him to the plaintiff. On these facts the Court, presided over by Mukerrji and Carnduff, JJ., had to decide whether there was a recognition by the landlord of the transferee, as a tenant, and they answered the question in the negative. This case is an authority for the proposition that the fact that the transferee pays the rent as such transferee does not decide the question; he must establish that the landlord accepted rent from him as a tenant. In other words, it is the act of the landlord that decides the question, and not the act of the person who claims the status of the tenant.

These being the principles upon which the doctrine of recognition rests, I have to consider whether on the facts of this case, the defendants have established that Mr. Hudson was recognised as a tenant by the plaintiff. In support of his case, Mr. Manuk relies upon Exhibits N and N1, rent receipts granted to him by the landlord on the 20th April 1891 and 18th December 1892 respectively, and upon Exhibit 1, the rent receipt dated the 18th Baisakh 1303 (16th April 1896), upon Exhibit K, the wasilbaki paper for 1304, and upon the recitals of the lease, Exhibit I, taken by Mr. Hudson on the 19th April 1897. The plaintiff, on the other hand, relies upon Exhibit 7, Exhibit 8 and upon the terms of the lease Exhibit 1.

The argument in regard to Exhibits N and N1 is a short one and may be disposed of at once. Exhibit N1 is a receipt for thikadari rent and does not touch the case of either party. Exhibit N, however, stands on a different footing; and, if genuine, completely establishes the defendants' case. It purports to be a receipt for kasht lands in addition to other lands. The defendants called Rudra Prashad, the writer of the document, and he asserted that the word 'mai' (meaning "with") was not in his handwriting and that it was doubtful whether the word kasht was in his handwriting. After examining the document, he said that "it may be that the word formerly was 'babat' (meaning 'on account of') and that it has been changed to kasht" An inspection of the document has satisfied me that it has been deliberately tampered with; and I can place no reliance on it. It is only necessary to add that, at the hearing of the appeal before Mr. Justice Mullick and Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad, Mr. Manuk stated that he would not rely either on Exhibit N or N-1 as the appearance of the disputed part of Exhibit N was suspicious. I must, therefore, reject these documents entirely from my consideration.

I now come to the other documents on which reliance is placed by the parties. In order to understand and appreciate these documents, it is important to consider the rival cases that have been put forward in this Court. It will be remembered that the last lease taken by Nathu Lal expired in 1304, and that it was during the pendency of that lease that Nathu Lal conveyed the Indigo Concern to Mr. Hudson. It will also be remembered that the first lease taken by Mr. Hudson (Exhibit 1) is dated the 19th April 1897 and was to run from 1305 to 1312. The defendants' case is that in 1303 and 1304 the Factory was not in possession of the Mauza as the thikadar, but retained the disputed lands as an occupancy tenant, for which Mr. Hudson, on the 16th Baisakh 1303 (16th April 1896), paid Rs. 138 out of the total rent of Rs. 197-14-0 due by him to the landlord for 1303 and received a rent receipt, Exhibit 1, by which the landlord recognized him as an occupancy tenant.

They say that during the negotiation for a fresh ticca lease which ultimately resulted in the lease of 19th April 1897, it was agreed between Mr. Hudson, and the plaintiff that he, Mr. Hudson, should make himself responsible for the rents due by the raiyats to the landlord for the years 1303 and 1304 and recover them from the raiyats, and that, in pursuance of this arrangement and in order to determine what was due by the raiyats for these two years, an adjustment of account took place between Mr. Hudson and the raiyats. This adjustment of account, according to the defendants, was evidenced by Exhibit K, which established that Mr. Hudson was the only "cultivator" who had paid rent during those two years, the amount paid by him being Rs. 138. That document shows that, after deducting Rs. 138 already paid by Mr. Hudson, there was a balance of Rs. 1,012 due by the raiyats (including Mr. Hudson) which Mr. Hudson undertook, in the first instance, to pay to the plaintiff. The defendants contend that this arrangement is completely borne out by the recitals of the lease Exhibit 1 which, read in conjunction with Exhibits I and K, completely establish that the plaintiff recognized Mr. Hudson as a raiyat.

The plaintiff's case is this: that he granted an oral lease to Mr. Hudson for the years 1303 and 1304 and that Rs. 138 was collected by Matuk Lal from the tenants and not from Mr. Hudson. He strongly relies upon Exhibits 7 and 8, and upon the terms of the lease Exhibit I. It will be remembered that though the title passed to the plaintiff on the 13th July 1895 by virtue of his purchase still, as he could not pay the full consideration-money, he did not get possession until the 29th August 1896; and the plaintiff's case is that it was arranged betwe n him and the outgoing proprietor Matuk Lal that, in lieu of interest due on the purchase-money which remained unpaid, he would pay Matuk Lal such income as he did receive from the conveyed property, namely, Rs. 500 as ticca rent, and Rs. 20 as rent of the occupancy holding of Gowsan Mian which had always been excluded from the ticca, Rs. 520 in all. Exhibit 7, according to the plaintiff, sets out the arrangement between him and Matuk Lal, and shows that, after giving a deduction for Rs. 138 which, according to Exhibit 7, Matuk Lal had received from the tenants there was a sum of Rs. 382 due by the plaintiff to Matuk Lal, which the plaintiff paid to Matuk Lal and for which he received the receipt Exhibit 7. Exhibit 8 purports to give a list of the raiyats from whom Rs. 138 was collected.

Now, as is usual in these cases, each side challenges the documents on which the other side relies. The plaintiff says that Exhibits I and K have been fabricated by the defendants in order to make it appear that Rs. 138 was paid by Mr. Hudson as rent of the occupancy holdings, and the defendants retort that Exhibits 7 and 8 have been fabricated by the plaintiff in order to make it appear that that sum of money was collected by Matuk Lal from the raiyats, of whom Mr. Hudson was not one. Now the common case of the parties is that Rs 138 was in fact collected by Matuk Lal at a time when he was in actual possession of the Zamindari, though he had executed a sale-deed in favour of the plaintiff. They differ as to the source from which the collection was made, the plaintiff asserting that it was made from tenants of whom Mr. Hudson was not one, the defendants insisting that it was made from Mr. Hudson himself.

Now, the genuineness of Exhibit 7 has been proved beyond dispute by one of the witnesses examined on behalf of the defendants. Exhibit 8, however, stands on a different footing. It is a document which could be prepared at any time by any enterprising Zamindar, and I agree with Mr. Manuk that we ought not to attach any importance to it. Now Exhibit 7 establishes that Matuk Lal had received Rs. 138 from the tenants. The word is used in the plural, reyayanangayraya, and certainly throws suspicion on the defendant's case that that sum of money was collected from Mr. Hudson himself. It conclusively establishes, in my opinion, that, so far as Matuk Lal is concerned, he was not aware of the fact that the collection had been made from Mr. Hudson, though it does not establish that Mr. Hudson in fact did not pay it.

I now come to Exhibit I, which, after the exclusion of Exhibits N and N1, constitutes the only documentary evidence of receipt of rent by Matuk Lal from Mr. Hudson. It purports to be a rent receipt dated the 18th Baisak 1303 granted on behalf of Matuk Lal to Mr. Hudson in respect of raiyati lands. The receipt is for Rs. 138, and was actually signed by Khub Lal Pa wari, nephew of Dwarka Lal Patwari. The plaintiff asserts that this rent-receipt has been fabricated by the defendants, and he relies upon Exhibit 7 containing the statement of Matuk Lal himself that he had collected Rs. 138 from the tenants. Now the defendants have undoubtedly put forward forged and fabricated documents in support of their case, Exhibit E. Exhibit D, Exhibits H, H1, H2, H3 and Exhibit N. I am bound, therefore, to look upon any document produced by the defendants with suspicion and require the strictest proof of its genuineness. Now there are three points that at once arise in connection with this rent receipt. In the first place, according to what calculation and on what basis was Rs. 138 paid on the 8th Baisak 1303? The defendants' own case is, as shown by Exhibit R, that the rent was payable in two kists of Rs. 98-15 0 each. Now every rent-receipt ought to show in respect of which kist the rent is paid. The form of receipt as given in the Bengal Tenancy Act, Schedule II, requires the kist in respect of which the rent is paid to be stated. So far as the form is concerned, Exhibit I complies with the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but it is remarkable that only the year is mentioned in that portion of the receipt where the kist in respect of which the rent was paid ought to have been stated. The reason is not far to seek: for, if the rent was payable in two kists, then the payment of Rs. 138 on the 18th Baisak 1303 was certainly an over-payment. Now, in making this point, I must make it clear that no portion of the rent alleged to have been paid on the 18th Baisak was appropriated towards arrears of rent. The receipt, Exhibit I, shows that the whole of Rs. 138 was appropriated towards current rent. But then there is this difficulty that the current rent could never exceed Rs. 98-15-0, if, as Exhibit R shows, the rent was payable in two kists. If it be argued that the statement as to the kists in Exhibit R was a mistake on the part of the Pleader of the respondents, then the respondents are in a worse position; for if there be no agreement between the parties or established usage to the contrary, a money rent is payable, under section 53 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, in four equal instalments falling due on the last day of each quarter of the agricultural year, and the current rent, in the present case, could never exceed Rs. 49-7-6. Now the only argument of Mr. Manuk is that, if he were forging a document, he would have forged it so as to make it consistent with the agreement between the parties as to the instalments in which the rent was payable. But there is an obvious weakness in the argument. The one fact established beyond all reasonable doubt is that Matuk Lal did collect Rs. 138. The plaintiff was in possession of Exhibit 7, the receipt granted by Matuk Lal to him and of the lease, Exhibit 1, in which it was recited that Rs. 138 had been collected by Matuk Lal. That being so, it was obviously impossible for him to make any other case but this that that Rs. 138 had been collected by Matuk Lal from him.

Secondly, the non-production of the books of account by the defendants ought to have an important bearing on the question. The defendants must have known that the genuineness of Exhibit 1 would be the critical question in the case, and it was possible for them to establish the payment of rent by them beyond all reasonable doubt by the production of their account-books. I wholly disbelieve the explanation which has been offered, namely, that the books of account are not in existence; and the inference which I draw from the non production of the books is that, if produced, they would not support Exhibit I.

Lastly, I am suspicious of the person who actually signed the rent-receipt on behalf of Matuk Lal. Now the Bengal Tenancy Act requires a rent-receipt to be signed either by the landlord or his authorised agent. Exhibit I was in fact signed by Khub Lal who described himself as "Patwari, nephew of Dwarka Lal Patwari." Now it is admitted that Dwarka Lal was the only registered Patwari of Matuk Lal: but it is contended by Mr. Manuk that Khub Lal had authority from Matuk Lal to grant rent-receipts, and he relies upon the evidence of Prayag Dutt, Baldeo Lal and Bhootan Misser. Now all that Prayag Dutt says is that Khub Lal was the nephew of Dwarka Lal and that "he used to work with Dwarka Lal." This does not establish that he was the authorised agent of Matuk Lal. It is one thing to work with a Patwari, and quite another thing to have the same power as a Patwari in relation to the landlord. Baldeo Lal is the son of Khub Lal and he says that his father collected rent from Matuk Lal up to 1304. That may be so; but the authority to collect rent does not carry with it the authority to grant rent-receipts. The question is not one of technicality, but of substance; for it may well be that Khub Lal, as the nephew of Dwarka Lal, used to help Dwarka Lal in the matter of collection of rent just as many other persons must have helped Dwarka Lal. But "an authorised agent" for the purpose of granting rent-receipts differs widely from a collecting peon such as Khub Lal might have been. The last witness on this point is Bhootan Misser who asserts that Khub Lal was the Patwari of the putti under Matuk Lal, but in cross examination he admits that he has seen no Parwana authorising Khub Lal to collect rent for Matuk Lal. In view of the admitted fact that Dwarka Lal was the registered Patwari of Matuk Lal, I altogether disbelieve this witness. Mr Manuk also relied upon Exhibit N as showing that Khub Lal used to collect rent on behalf of Matuk Lal. I have no doubt that he did; but the important fact to remember is that Exhibit N was signed as a rent-receipt, not by Khub Lal, but by Matuk Lal himself. That document makes it quite clear that Khub Lal was in the position of a collecting peon, and I have no doubt on the evidence of Prayag Dutt and Baldeo Lal that that was his position. I have examined the entire evidense connected with Exhibit I with great anxiety and I have come to the conclusion that it is not a genuine document and ought not to be relied upon. I have no doubt whatever that it has been fabricated in order that the defendants may take advantage of the admitted fact that Matuk Lal had collected Rs. 138 from the tenants. I have also no doubt that they induced Khub Lal to make over the rent-receipt to them, just as later on they induced his son Baldeo Lal to produce the jamabandis Exhibits H, H1, H2 and H3 in Court.

I have next to consider the effect of Exhibit I on the fortunes of the case, assuming it to be a genuine document. All that this document establishes is that Mr. Hudson paid Rs. 138 to Khub Lal and received a rent receipt from Khub Lal. But the question is not whether Mr. Hudson paid Rs. 138 as the rent of the disputed lands, but whether a landlord having the right to recognize a trespasser as the tenant did recognize him as such. Exhibit 7 is very important from this point of view, for Matuk Lal's statement in Exhibit 7 is that he had realised Rs. 138 from the tenants. Now with reference to Exhibit I two questions arise; first, whether Khub Lal had any authority to bind Matuk Lal by recognizing Mr. Hudson as a raiyat, assuming Khub Lal was the Patwari of Matuk Lal; and, secondly, whether Matuk himself could have recognized Mr. Hudson as a raiyat. On the first question, the decisions of this Court are conclusive. The late Chief Justice of this Court discussed the identical point in the case of Wyatt, A. W. N. v. Sheo Gobind Sahu (15). In the course of his judgment, he said as follows: "The position and duties of a Patwari are well-known. He is a poorly paid underling employed only to collect rents due to his master and to grant receipts for the same. His implied authority would extend to all subordinate acts which are necessary or incidental to his express authority..... In my opinion it is not within the scope of the authority of a rent collector to consent on behalf of his master to the transfer of an occupancy holding. That is an important act to be performed only by a person having some at least of the powers of a manager. I cannot accept the suggestion which has been made that it lay on the landlord in this case to prove that the Patwari had not authority to consent to the transfer. Landlords would be in a very difficult position if it were held that Patwaris and other underlings should be presumed, till the contrary is shown, to have the power to sign away their master's rights." The same view was taken in the case of Janki Sahu v. Thakur Run Bahadur Singh (14). There is no injustice in the rule propounded in these cases, for, as was pointed out in Russo-Chinese Bank v. Li Yau Sam (13), "the authority being thus represented to be limited, the party prejudiced has notice, and should ascertain whether or not the act is authorised." I am of opinion that Exhibit I did not bind Matuk Lal and does not bind the plaintiff.

But even if it be assumed that the receipt granted by Khub Lal bound Matuk Lal, I do not see how it can be argued that it also bound the plaintiff. It will be convenient, at this stage, to consider an argument which was suggested rather than formulated by Mr. Manuk, namely, that the title in the Touzi passed to the plaintiff, not on the 13th July 1895, the date of the conveyance, but on the 29th August 1896, the date on which the plaintiff paid the purchase-money to Matuk Lal, and that consequently the recognition of the transfer of the tenancy by Matuk Lal on the 16th April 1896 the date on which the rent receipt was granted by Khub Lal to Mr. Hudson, completely bound the plaintiff. The argument, in my opinion, proceeded upon a complete disregard of the essential distinction between a sale and a contract for sale, a distinction which it was the object of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act to recognize and preserve. Now it will be noticed that it is not an essential condition for a sale that the purchase-money should be paid; all that is necessary is that there should be a transfer of ownership in exchange for a price paid or promised or part paid and part promised and that the transaction, in the case of tangible immoveable property of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards, should be evidenced by a registered instrument. Here the document of the 13th July 1895 purports on the face of it to create a transfer. It is a conveyance and not an agreement to convey, and it was executed, delivered and duly registered in accordance with law. What, then, is the position? I cannot do better than quote the weighty observation of Farran, C. J in Tatia v. Bob ji (24): "I am not, however," said the distinguished Chief Justice, "as at present advised, prepared to assent to the train of thought which puts conveyances of lands in the Mofussil perfected by possession or registration, where the consideration expressed in the conveyance to have been paid has not in fact been paid, in the same category as contracts void for want of consideration. The radical distinction between a perfected conveyance and a contract does not seem...to have been sufficiently borne in mind throughout the judgment." In my opinion, the document operated as a conveyance on the date of its execution, unless indeed it could be shown by the vendor that there was a separate oral agreement constituting a condition precedent to the attaching of any obligation under the document. But such a separate oral agreement could be proved only by the vendor or his representative in interest. For this proposition, the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Achal Ram v. Hakim Husain Khan (25) is conclusive. The defendants are not the representatives-in-interest of Matuk Lal, and consequently it is not open to them to contend that, though the document was executed on the 13th July 1895, and though it purported, on the face of it, to be a conveyance and not an agreement to convey, title nevertheless did not pass until the payment of the purchase-money by the plaintiff to Matuk Lal. But, even if it be open to the defendants to raise the contention, I am of opinion that they have not shown that the intention of the parties was that title should not pass until the payment of the purchase-money. The only circumstance upon which the defendants rely is that the purchase-money was not paid till the 29th August 1896. But it has been held in a series of cases that that circumstance is wholly immaterial; see, Umedmal Motiram v. Davu (26), Sagaji v. Namdev (27), Shib Lal v. Bhagwan Das (28), Baijnath Singh v. Paltu (29), Manogi Singh v. Sarat Lal Mahto (30), Nilmadhab Parhi v. Haran Prosad Parhi (31). On the other hand, Mr. Hudson certainly accepted the position that the plaintiff had a good and valid title to the Touzi from the beginning of 1303 (8th September 1895). By the kabuliyat which Mr. Hudson executed in favour of the plaintiff, he agreed to be responsible to the plaintiff for the rent due to him by the tenants for the years 1303 and 1304, he could only have agreed to be so responsible on the hypothesis that the title had passed to the plaintiff on the execution of the conveyance. It must follow, then, in the view which I take, that the alleged act of Matuk Lal in recognizing Mr. Hudson as an occupancy tenant cannot operate to the prejudice of the plaintiff. Mr. Manuk, then, relies upon section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and argues that the only person who could give a valid receipt for the rent was Matuk Lal as he was admittedly the registered proprietor on the date when the rent-receipt was granted. That may be so, but it is one thing to give a valid receipt for rent and quite another to recognize a person as having a right of occupancy in the disputed land. The question only arises on the hypothesis that the defendant apart from the recognition has no title to the lands in dispute. If he has, the question of recognition does not arise. The question is—can a person who has conveyed his proprietary interest to another person but whose name is still borne on the Collector's register by giving a rent-receipt recognize a person as having a right of occupancy in the land who otherwise has no such right. I am of opinion that it is impossible to uphold the contention of Mr. Manuk. I must, therefore, hold that Exhibit I does not establish any recognition of the defendants' status by the plaintiff.

I now come to Exhibit K. This document purports to evidence an adjustment of account between Mr. Hudson and the raiyats to which the plaintiff is not a party. It describes the proprietor of the Factory as a cultivator and discloses the fact that Rs. 395-12-0 was the rent due by him to the landlord in respect of the years 1303 and 1304 out of which Rs. 138 had been paid by him. It is an ex-parte statement by Mr. Hudson and stands on the some footing as Exhibit 8 which I have refused to take into consideration. This document, in my opinion, must stand or fall with Exhibit I; and as I have come to the conclusion that Exhibit I is not a genuine document, I can place no reliance whatever on Exhibit K. But, apart from any other consideration, I do not see how this document establishes a case of recognition, since the statement made in Exhibit K is that of Mr. Hudson and not that of the plaintiff. It is elementary that an assertion by a tenant does not establish a case of recognition. It must be established that such an assertion was made to the knowledge of the landlord and that the landlord acquiesced in the assertion deliberately and with knowledge as to its effect. Now is there any proof that the plaintiff or his authorised agent was present at the transaction which resulted in Exhibit K or that Exhibit K was brought to the notice of the plaintiff or his authorised agent? The defendants have examined two witnesses in order to prove Exhibit K: Mr. E. H. Hudson whose writing appears on Exhibit K and Gopal Lal, witness No. 11, who is alleged to have been present at the transaction. Now either of them says that the plaintiff or his authorised agent was present when Exhibit K was drawn up and prepared and there is no evidence at all to suggest that Exhibit K was ever brought to the notice of the plaintiff or his authorised agent. Now if in fact the plaintiff or his authorised agent, was present at the transaction of Exhibit K had at any time been brought to the notice of the plaintiff, we would expect to have evidence on this point since two witnesses, one of them being Mr. Hudson, have given evidence in connection with Exhibit K. It is, in my opinion, an inevitable inference from the failure on the part of the defendants to give any evidence on the point that the plaintiff was not present at the transaction which resulted in Exhibit K and that it was never brought to his notice. It has been suggested, however, that Haji Gowsan was present at the transaction and that is sufficient to affect the plaintiff with notice of the contents of Exhibit K; but Haji Gowsan, as Exhibit 8 shows, was the gomasta of Matuk Lal the outgoing proprietor and not the gomasta of the plaintiff. That being so, it is impossible to affect the plaintiff with notice of the contents of Exhibit K by the mere proof that Haji Gowsan was present at the transaction

I now come to the lease. The opening words are very important and run as follows: "I have obtained ticca patta of the whole and entire 8-annas of the Collectorate partitioned patti including 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs of zerait land lying as per boundaries given below.....at a consolidated uniform annual jama of Rs. 600" It is conceded that the 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs mentioned in the lease are the disputed lands in the suit; but it is contended by Mr. Manuk that the description of these lands as zerait lands does not conclude the defendants. I quite agree that the description does not conclude the defendants; but still it is evidence in the case and cannot be wholly ignored. Bhagtu Singh v. Raghu Nath Sahai (32). But quite apart from any other consideration, it is difficult to see why these lands should be specially included in the ticca to be held by the ticcadar along with other lands at a jama of Rs. 600 per annum, if in fact the Factory had a pre-existing title to these lands which gave it the right to hold these lands as their kasht lands at a jama of Rs. 197-14-0 per year. Now the reason for not concluding a tenant by his description of land as zerait land is this: that if in fact it were raiyati land, such a description if it were conclusive on the point, might have the effect of barring in perpetuity the acquisition of an occupancy right in the land. But the reason does not operate where the case of the tenant is, as it is here, that by the lease itself the landlord recognised the tenant, as a tenant having rights of occupancy in the land. I think, therefore, that when we are considering, not whether the tenant can by lapse of time acquire a right of occupancy in the land but whether his status as an occupancy tenant has been recognised by the landlord by a series of transactions culminating in the lease itself, it is important to consider how the land has been described in the lease itself and whether there is a demise in respect of that land within the jama mentioned in the lease.

The next important passage in the lease runs as follows:—"There was Rs. 1,150 on account of rent for 1303 and 1304 F. due by the tenants. Out of this Rs. 133 had already been received by the former proprietors, and the remaining sum of Rs. 1,012 was found justly payable to the landlords by the tenants and by me the ticcadar which I the ticcadar have paid to them in cash and in one lump on getting receipts, and the landlords have brought it to their possession and appropriation, and I, the ticcadar, will get the same from the tenants of the village and from my own tahvil."

The passage is so important that it is necessary to consider it line by line to see if it establishes a case of recognition by the plaintiff. To start with, it certainly does not establish the case of the plaintiff that the Factory was in possession of the Touzi as ticcadar under the oral lease during the years 1303 and 1304; but I am not prepared to dismiss the evidence on this point of the plaintiff Bhanna Lal Chowdhury as deliberately false. The Factory was in possession under a lease which expired in 1302. Meanwhile, Matuk Lal had sold his proprietary interest to the plaintiff. Documentary evidence conclusively establishes that negotiations were proceeding with the Factory for a fresh lease. The position of the Factory as ticcadar for 1303 and 1304 was clearly recognised by the lease Exhibit 1; for on no other hypothesis could the Factory make itself liable for the entire rent due to the landlord for 1303 and 1304 and recover those rents from the tenants. If their status as ticcadar for 1303 and 1304 has not been recognised by the plaintiff, then it would have been impossible for the Factory to realise the rents from the tenants in respect of those years. The question, in my opinion, is not really one of fact, but an inference from certain admitted facts and, though I agree that there was no definite oral lease in favour of the Factory in 1303 which entitled the Factory to retain their ticcadari interest for the years 1303 and 1304, I cannot ignore the arrangement that was arrived at between the plaintiff and the Factory by which the status of the Factory as ticcadar for the years 1303 and 1304 was clearly recognised by the plaintiff. Mr. Manuk, I think, is right in saying that when the Factory wanted to take a lease the plaintiff made this condition with the Factory: "You make yourself liable to me for the rents due from the tenants for the years 1303 and 1304". Such a condition was necessary, as the plaintiff was a new landlord and was not acquainted with the local conditions; whereas the Factory, having been the ticcadar, knew exactly what the position was. As a result of the arrangement between them, the Factory made itself primarily liable to the plaintiff for Rs. 1,012, irrespective of the question whether it could or could not collect it from the tenants, subject only to this that if the Factory suffered any loss in respect of the arrears for 1303, the plaintiff would be responsible therefor.

Now, is there anything in the passage cited which proves that the plaintiff accepted the position that the Factory was an occupancy tenant having succeeded to the interest of Nathu Lal in his occupancy holdings? For nothing short of that will do, as the cases to which I have referred establish. The document recites that "there was Rs. 1,150 on account of rent for 1303 and 1304 due by the tenants." There is no suggestion here that Mr. Hudson was one of the tenants or that any portion of Rs. 1,150 was due from him. It was argued that it is this recital in the lease which establishes that Exhibit K was brought to the notice of the plaintiff. I am unable to accede to this argument. I quite agree that if it is a necessary inference from the recital that Rs 1,150 on account of rent for 1303 and 1304 was due by the tenants to the plaintiff, that the plaintiff must have seen the contents of Exhibit K, then we must make that inference; but, in my opinion, the inference is not a necessary or an inevitable one. It was possible for the defendants to establish by evidence that Exhibit K was brought to the notice of the plaintiff. They have examined two witnesses to prove Exhibit K, one of them being Mr. Hudson himself. It is, in my opinion, very significant that neither of these two witnesses says that Exhibit K was ever brought to the notice of the plaintiff. It was argued before us that it was impossible for the plaintiff to assert that Rs. 1,150 was due from the tenants unless he had seen Exhibit K. This, in my opinion, assumes the genuineness of Exhibit K. The argument of the plaintiff is that Exhibit K has been fabricated on the basis of this very recital in order to lend support to their case that a portion of Rs. 1,150 was due from them in respect of their occupancy holdings. Even if we accept the genuineness of Exhibit K, there is nothing in the recital to which I have referred to establish that Exhibit K must have been brought to the notice of the plaintiff. The utmost that can be argued is that the recital is consistent with the case of the defendants on whom, it must be remembered, the onus lies; but then it is equally consistent with the case of the plaintiff. Three different theories may be advanced as to how the plaintiff came to accept the position that Rs. 1,150 was due to him on account of rent for 1303 and 1304. One of the theories undoubtedly is that he accepted the correctness of Exhibit K. Another theory may be that he accepted the statement made by Mr. Hudson on the point; and as the sum of Rs. 1,150, the rent said to be due to him from the tenants for 1303 and 1304, exceeded the ticca rent that was hitherto paid by the ticcadar to the landlord which ticca rent was Rs. 500 per year, he accepted the statement without further question. Another theory may be that he accepted the figure from Matuk Lal who was the outgoing proprietor and who, as Exhibit 7 shows, gave the information that Rs. 138 had already been received by him as rent from the tenants. The question, in my opinion, is one of entire speculation as to how the plaintiff accepted the position that Rs. 1,150 was due to him from the tenants from 1303 and 1304; and I must respectfully decline to be drawn into a speculation on this point. There is no direct proof that the plaintiff was aware of the contents of Exhibit K. The circumstances in connection with the recital, to which I have already referred, are equally consistent both with the case of the plaintiff as with the case of the defendants. In such circumstances, the defendants on whom the onus of proof as to recognition lies, must fail. The following passage from the judgment of Lord Halsbury, L. C., in the case of Wakelin v. L. & S. W. Ry. (33) may be usefully cited in this connection:—"My Lords, it is incumbent upon the plaintiff in this case to establish by proof that her husband's death has been caused by some negligence of the defendants, some negligent act, or some negligent omission, to which the injury complained of in this case, the death of the husband, is attributable. That is the fact to be proved. If that fact is not proved the plaintiff fails, and if in the absence of direct proof the circumstances which are established are equally consistent with the allegation of the plaintiff as with the denial of the defendants, the plaintiff fails, for the very simple reason that the plaintiff is bound to establish the affirmative of the proposition; 'Ei qui affirmat non ei qui negat incumbit probatio'" In my opinion, therefore, it is not a necessary or an inevitable inference from the recital to which I have referred that the plaintiff was aware of the contents of Exhibit K. Then the lease recites that "Rs. 138 had already been received by the former proprietors." Here, again, there is no suggestion that that sum of money had been paid by Mr Hudson and not by the tenants other than Mr. Hudson. In fact, Exhibit 7 shows that Matuk Lal had received that sum of money from Rayanaugharaya, that is to say, from tenants (in the plural). Then comes the critical passage on which Mr. Mannk strongly relies; "and the remaining sum of Rs. 1,012 was found justly payable to the landlord by the tenants and by me the ticcadar which I, the ticcadar, have paid to them in cash and in one lump on getting receipts and I, the ticcadar, will get the same from the tenants of the village and from my own tahvil." I confess that when the arrangement between the plaintiff and Mr. Hudson is remembered there is no difficulty in understanding what the passage means. Mr. Hudson was primarily liable to the plaintiff for Rs. 1,012, though he was entitled to recoup himself from the tenant; and the statement that the sum of Rs. 1,012 was found payable by the tenants and by him the ticcadar does not, in my opinion, carry with it an assertion that he was an occupancy tenant having a distinct liability for rent to the plaintiff in respect of the occupancy holdings. Nor does the recital that Mr. Hudson would recover the sum paid by him to the plaintiff from the tenants of the village and from his own "tahvil" carry the case any further, for admittedly the loss would fall on his "tahvil" if he failed to recover any portion of the rent from the tenants. If I may appropriate the language of the learned Judges in the cases to which I have referred, there is nothing to show in this passage what was the particular interest belonging to the defendant, for he does not distinctly state what is the interest he distinctly claims. Nor does it amount to more than this, that he paid the money or undertook to pay it in the names of the admitted raiyats along with his own. Recognition, as I have said before, is a deliberate act with knowledge of its effect; and there is, in my opinion, no injustice in declining to found recognition on the recitals, if they are consistent with the case made by the plaintiff. The passage, which I have already cited from the judgment of Lord Halsbury, L. C., supports this proposition, and the cases to which I have referred recognise the principle. In my judgment, there is no assertion in these recitals that Mr. Hudson was an occupancy tenant having succeeded to the interest that belonged to Nathu Lal. In the second place, even if there was such an assertion and the plaintiff took away Rs. 1,012 paid by Mr. Hudson, there was no acceptance by the plaintiff of the position of Mr. Hudson as an occupancy tenant, since the plaintiff was entitled to that sum from Mr. Hudson and he had a right to take the money, to quote the language employed in Robert Wilson v. Radha Dulari Kuer (22), "without regard to the manner in which or the source from which" Mr. Hudson had procured it. The plaintiff had the right to assume that Mr. Hudson's admission of liability arose out of the agreement between him and Mr. Hudson preliminary to the lease, by which Mr. Hudson made himself liable for the entire rent due from the raiyats in respect of the years 1303 and 1304; and if he was entitled to the entire rent from Mr. Hudson, it clearly made no difference to him whether Mr. Hudson recouped himself from the tenants or paid it out of his own "tahvil". In my opinion, the principles laid down in the cases to which I have referred, are equally applicable here, and I must hold that there is nothing in the recitals from which it can be legitimately inferred that the plaintiff recognised Mr. Hudson as an occupancy tenant.

But if there is nothing in the recitals to establish a case of recognition by the plaintiff, there is, in the concluding portion of the lease, a statement which, in my opinion, directly negatives the defendants' case. But, as an ingenious attempt has been made to give an explanation to that passage by reference to those passages which precede it, it will be necessary for me to consider all these passages as a whole. These passages are as follows: "If for the arrears due by the tenants I have to institute suits and if I obtain decrees and by enforcing them I put to sale their occupancy holdings and purchase them or if I acquire occupancy rights in any way, then, after the expiry of the term of ticca, in my favour, I will on receipt of the sale-proceeds make over to the landlords the possession thereof without any objection whatever on my part. I will give up possession of the lands as regards which I may acquire the right of occupancy and to this I will not raise any objection or contention whatever and if I do so, it will be deemed null and void and improper. Within the mahal I will not purchase the entire occupancy holding or any portion of it. If I do purchase, then, on the termination of the term hereof, it will pass into the possession of the landlords as their serait land and to this I, the ticcadar, have not and shall not have any objection or contention whatever." Now, stopping here for a moment, there can be no doubt whatever that the passages which I have cited refer to the acquisition of occupancy rights by Mr. Hudson either by private contract or in execution of rent-decrees that may be obtained by him as ticcadar against the tenants, and the agreement between the parties expressly provides, what the law implies, that such occupancy rights belong to the landlord, and must be made over to the landlord on the expiry of the ticca lease. Then occured the passage on which reliance is placed by Mr. Hassan Imam on behalf of the plaintiff. "In Assin 1312 F. S. I will cut down the indigo crops that may be standing on the zerait lands on payment of 10 annas instalment of rent, and without waiting for any notice, I will relinquish possession of the leasehold property, and in that circumstance I shall have no right to interfere in the leasehold property nor shall I have any right of occupancy in the zerait lands, etc." Now, it will be remembered that the lease was for seven years and that it expired on the last day of 1311. But, in order to secure to Mr. Hudson the indigo crops grown on the disputed land, the lease provided that Mr. Hudson would have the right to retain possession of the disputed land up to Assin 1312 on the payment of ten-annas instalment of the rent. Now, if this passage is referring to the lands in dispute, the condition is utterly inconsistent with the case set up by the defendants. Now I quite understand that any condition in a cultivating lease which bars in perpetuity the acquisition of an occupancy right by the raiyat is wholly void and does not operate to prevent the accrual of such right. If the fact of the tenancy had been established independantly of the lease, then I agree with Mr. Manuk that we ought to wholly ignore the covenant of surrender contained in the lease. But the whole argument of Mr. Manuk is,—I am quoting the exact words used by Mr. Manuk:—"By this lease, the plaintiff adopted and ratified the transactions as evidenced by Exhibits I and K." In other words, the lease itself amounts to a recognition of the occupancy rights of the defendants in the disputed lands. Now, if Mr. Manuk is relying upon the lease itself in support of his case as to recognition, it is surely relevant to ask how is it that by the same lease the landlord is providing for the extension of the term up to Assin 1312 and stipulating for relinquishment of possession by Mr. Hudson on the expiry of the month of Assin 1312? It is, in my opinion, open to the defendants to argue that the covenant as to relinquishment of possession is wholly void and inoperative, but then they must be prepared to establish their tenancy rights by independent evidence and without reference to the terms of the lease containing the covenant. But it is not open to them to say, "we rely upon the lease to establish recognition of our tenancy rights by the landlord, and we ask you to hold that the covenant as to relinquishment of possession is wholly void and inoperative." The same document cannot, in my opinion, constitute both recognition and non-recognition. In my opinion, in order to see whether there was a recognition by the lease itself, I ought to look at the whole lease, and when I do so, I find it impossible to hold that the plaintiff deliberately recognised,—for the act of recognition must be a deliberate one,—that the plaintiff deliberately recognised Mr. Hudson as an occupancy tenant, when I find in the same lease conditions which are incapable of explanation on the hypothesis that there was a recognition of the status of Mr. Hudson as an occupancy tenant by the plaintiff.

But then an ingenious argument was advanced by Mr. Manuk. The argument was that the clause containing the covenant for relinquishment of possession of the zerait lands was intended to apply and apply only to the lands that might be acquired during the subsistence of the lease either by private contract or in execution of rent decrees that might be obtained by the ticcadar against the tenants. With all respect, the argument is wholly inadmissible. In the first place, the clauses as to acquisition of occupancy rights during the currency of the lease contain their own covenants for relinquishment of possession. In the second place, it is impossible to ignore the clear distinction made in the lease between occupancy rights and zerait lands. Occupancy rights are such rights as may be purchased by Mr. Hudson during the currency of the lease, and these Mr. Hudson agrees to surrender on the expiry of the lease. Zerait lands are also defined with sufficient clearness in the lease, and they comprise, and comprise only the 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs of land which are in dispute in this suit. The opening lines of the lease make this clear and the Survey members and the area of the zerait lands are given in the schedule to comprise an area of 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs of land. In my opinion, the lease contains its own interpretation as to the term zerait lands, and by no possible construction of the lease can it be held that the term "zerait lands" used in the clause on which Mr. Hasan Imam relies means occupancy rights purchased from the tenants during the currency of the lease. In my opinion, the lease Exhibit 1, far from establishing the defendants' case, entirely destroys it; and I hold that there is no evidence in the record from which it can be legitimately inferred that the plaintiff recognized Mr. Hudson as an occupancy tenant in relation to the lands in dispute. It must follow that the defendant was bound to make over the disputed lands to the plaintiff on the expiry of the lease.

I would allow the appeal, set aside the decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge and give the plaintiff a decree for possession of the properties claimed in the suit with mesne profits and costs throughout.

ADAMI, J.—It is not necessary for me to set out in detail either the facts of the case or the points for consideration for they have been most clearly explained in the judgments of my Lord the Chief Justice and DAS, J.

Firstly, with regard to the acquisition of occupancy holdings by Nathu Lal, the defence case was that Nathu Lal acquired the occupancy holdings, 36 bighas 7 cattas 11 dhurs in area, between 1863 and 1865 and obtained an express recognition of the transfer from the landlord at the end of 1865 by a letter dated the 19th December 1865 (Exhibit D). To support this case the letter and certain jamabandis are produced. It is not proved that in the locality occupancy holdings are transferable without the consent of the landlord, and, in the first place, the question arises whether Sunder Sahay, the landlord, had authority to recognise the transfer. He was an eight-anna sharer in the estates, but it is the defendants' case that previous to 1865 there had been a private partition of the estate and under it Sunder Sahay became sole landlord of the Mauza within which the 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs are situated, and thus had authority to sanction a transfer. To support this case the defence rely on the headings of the jamabandis (Exhibits H and H1) for 1271 (1863-64) and 1273 (1865-1866) which described the putti as the private partitioned putti of Sunder Sahay. In 1868 there was a Collectorate partition of the estate on the application of all the share-holders and the jamabandis produced for the years 1869-1870 and 1873-1874 show that the putti had been partitioned off by Collectorate partition. In any case, it would be very surprising that, after all the co-sharers had agreed on a private partition, they should all apply for a Collectorate partition and be ready to undergo the trouble and expense it would entail, but when we find that there is reason to suspect the genuineness of the jamabandis whose headings are used to support the case of private partition, great doubt must arise whether there ever was a private partition, and, therefore, whether Sunder Sahay in 1865 had authority to recognise a transfer of occupancy holdings.

The jamabandis are depended upon to support the case that Nathu Lal purchased occupancy holdings of an area of 35 bighas odd. A comparison of these papers with the batwara khasra (Exhibit 22) of 1868 throws the greatest doubt on their genuineness, and the batwara khasra is an admittedly genuine and authoritative document. My learned brother DAS, J., has just dealt exhaustively with this point and it is not necessary to repeat the grounds he sets forth; the conclusion must be that the jamabandis cannot be relied on. The khasra shows that the jamabandis do not contain correct entries of the amount of land held in occupancy right by Nathu Lal as proprietor of the Pirakpur Indigo Factory. Nathu Lal, according to the Khasra, held 8 bighas 6 cottas 9½ dhurs only in occupancy right, and Sunder Sahay held 30 bighas 12 cottas 13¼ dhurs of zerait or bakasht lands. After the partition Nathu Lal took ticca lease of the village and most probably amalgamated the remaining bakasht land of Sunder Sahay, out of which 2 bighas 11 cottas 11¾ dhurs had been let out to a tenant, with his 8 bighas 6 cottas 9½ dhurs and treated the whole 33 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs as his tenancy lands.

There are other points in connection with the letter of recognition (Exhibit D) which gave rise to some suspicion and these taken with the clear untrustworthiness of the jamabandis make it impossible to decide either that Nathu Lal acquired occupancy rights in the 33 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs or that Sunder Sahay recognised the transfer of the rights.

It is next necessary to consider whether by the deed dated the 23rd July 1890 (Exhibit 12) Nathu Lal conveyed to Mr. Henry William Hudson any occupancy rights held by him in connection with the lands in the village of Etwarpur Jainti. Now it is quite plain that the deed was intended to convey and did convey the Pirakpur Indigo Concern and the schedules to the deed contained a list of all the villages and lands held by the Concern either in proprietary or ticcadari right, but there is no entry in the schedules of occupancy right in the 36 bighas now in dispute. The deed states that the vendors "have contracted with the purchaser for the sale to him of the Pirakpur Indigo Concern together with all the Taluks, Manzas, villages, lands, hereditaments and premises of which the particulars are set forth in the schedule," and proceeds to "grant, convey, transfer, assign, assure and confirm unto the purchaser, his heirs, executors administrators and assigns all and every, the said Taluks, Manzas and lands or parts or shares therein of which the particulars are contained in the said schedule hereto and also all other, if any, the hereditaments and property belonging to or forming part of or held with the said Taluks, Manzas and lands.....and all manner of rights, liberties, easements, privileges, profits, commodities, emoluments, advantages and appurtenances whatsoever to the said Taluks, Manzas, land, Indigo Concern and hereditaments belonging to or in any wise appertaining or therewith usually held used occupied possessed or enjoyed." Now even if it be held that the words from "and all manner of rights" onwards refer to incorporeal hereditaments and a right of occupancy is a corporeal hereditament, still the right of occupancy is a hereditament of the Indigo Concern held with or belonging to the Manza or lands mentioned in the schedule. As I have said, it is clear that the words of the deed show that the intention was to convey the Indigo Concern and every interest it possessed in the lands mentioned in the schedule, and I am of opinion that any right of occupancy possessed by the Concern in the scheduled lands passed to the purchasers under the deed. But, as found above, there is no reliable evidence that at most anything more than about 8 bighas would pass, for though Nathu Lal may have claimed tenancy over 36 bighas, the evidence to show that his tenancy had been ever recognised is untrustworthy.

It may be that Nathu Lal gave Mr. Henry William Hudson to understand that 36 bighas odd were held in tenancy right, and Mr. Hudson may well have believed that he had that right in the said area but until 1897 there is no good evidence of any recognition of the right by the landlord and in fact when the Settlement operations were going on, no claim was put forward by the Factory to be recorded as occupancy raiyat of the 36 bighas. The Settlement Record was finally published on the 22nd June 1896 and shows the 36 bighas to be "bakasht of the Factory but not zerait." The rent-receipts, Exhibits N and N-1, purporting to have been granted in 1891 and 1892 and to show acceptance of rent in respect of a tenancy of the 36 bighas bear such evident signs of their having been tampered with that it would be unsafe to rely on them.

In 1895 the lease under which the Indigo Concern held the lands expired. Matuk Lal was then the proprietor of the estate and was negotiating for its sale to the plaintiff. Mr. Richardson, who seems to have been looking after the affairs of the Indigo Concern, seems to have sought for a renewal of the lease but Matuk Lal proposed that 2 bighas of the zerait land should be excluded from the new patta: in his letter of the 19th June 1895 (Exhibit 3) Mr. Richardson protested that if the two bighas were excluded he would be a great loser. It is significant that Mr. Richardson did not resist the exclusion on the ground that the Factory held the lands in occupancy right, this he would surely have done if he had been conscious of the existence of any such right.

The plaintiff purchased the estate from Matuk Lal on the 13th of July 1895 and obtained title by virtue of the purchase but, as he did not pay the purchase-money till the 29th August 1896, he did not get possession till then. Meanwhile, Mr. Hudson was still in possession of the leasehold property though the lease had expired. During this period Rs. 138 was received by Matuk Lal in respect of rent of the property which was held by the Factory, and it appears that Matuk Lal, in agreement with the plaintiff, appropriated this in part payment of the consideration for the purchase by the plaintiff with interest. The plaintiff's case, as shown in his own evidence, is that Matuk Lal himself collected the sum of Rs. 138 from the tenants, and that the Factory was, during the period from 1895 to 1897, holding under an oral lease from him. That the plaintiff's evidence is unreliable there can be no doubt for he has contradicated himself gravely. I can find no reason for distrusting the defendants' case that in order to find out how much rent was due from tenants of the lands covered by the expired lease, Mr. Hudson called the tenants together and in their presence and that of the gomasta of Matuk Lal drew up a wasilbaki account on the 5th April 1897. This account (Exhibit K) showed that the total rents due for the years 1303 and 1304 amounted to Rs. 1,150. The Pirakpur Factory was in that account shown to be a cultivating tenant of 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs at a rent of Rs. 197 a year or Rs. 395-12-0 for the two years out of which Rs. 138 had been paid. On the back of the document Mr. Hudson on 8th April 1897 endorsed the fact that the total account amounted to Rs. 1,150 and that Rs. 1,012 was payable making allowance for the Rs. 138 already paid. The rent-receipt (Exhibit 1) signed by Khub Lal Patwari shows that Rs. 138 were paid on the 18th Baisak 1303. I can see no reason to doubt the genuineness of Exhibit K and the receipt Exhibit 1. In Exhibit K, Mr. Hudson claimed to be a raiyat in respect to the 36 bighas.

On the 19th April 1897 the plaintiff granted Mr. Hudson a lease "of the whole and entire 8-annas of the Collectorate partition patti including 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs of zerait land." In the Kabuliyat (Exhibit 1) the passage,

"There was Rs. 1,150 on account of rent for 1303 and 1304 F. S. due by the tenants, out of this Rs. 138 had already been received by the former proprietors, and the remaining sum of Rs. 1,012 was found justly payable to the landlord by the tenants and by me the ticcadar which I, the ticcadar, have paid to them in cash and in one lump on getting receipts and the landlords have brought it to their possession, and appropriation, and I the ticcadar will get the same from the tenants and from my own Tahsil, and as regards the arrear due by the tenants and by me the ticcadar for 1304 F. S. which I have paid to the landlords I shall have no objection. If as regards the arrears of 1303 F. S. I, the ticcadar, suffer any loss then the landlords will be responsible therefor" is relied on by the defendants to show that the plaintiff was cognisant of Mr. Hudson's claim of raiyati right in the 36 bighas and recognised him as tenant. If this contention were to succeed, the plaintiff's case must fail. Stress is laid on the fact that the kabuliyat mentions that the sum of Rs. 1,150 is due by tenants, and the amount still owing after the deduction of Rs. 138 is to be obtained from the tenants and from Mr. Hudson's own tahvil.

A recognition by a landlord to be effective in favour of a tenant must be clear and certain, but in the present instance it is difficult to reconcile the last portion of the kabuliyat with a recognition of occupancy rights. Mr. Hudson agreed that if, during the period of the lease, he acquired any occupancy holding he would give it up on expiry of the lease and it would pass into the possession of the landlord as his zerait. The concluding passage of the lease runs, "I will cut down the indigo crops that may be standing on the zeriat lands on payment of 10-annas instalment of rent and without waiting for any notice I will relinquish possession of the leasehold property and in that circumstance I shall have no right to interfere in the leasehold property nor shall I have any right of occupancy in the zerait lands, etc."

On the face of it, this concluding portion of the kabuliyat would seem to negative any recognition of an occupancy right, but the undertaking is one which is commonly entered in kabuliyat and which, where occupancy rights exist, has no binding force under the law. At the same time if Mr. Hudson has been cognisant of any such right and was claiming it we would have expected express exception of the occupancy right he claimed. It might well be that the zerait lands on which he was to be allowed to cut the indigo in Assar 1302 were understood by him to mean occupancy holding which he might acquire during the term of the lease and which were to revert to the landlord as zerait on its expiry, but it has to be remembered that the 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs had been described at the beginning of the kabuliyat as zerait. The general tenor of the document seems to be that all the leased lands were to be returned to the landlord and no occupancy right was to be retained or claimed. How then can the passage relating to the Rs. 1,150 due by the tenants which I have cited above be explained, for it seems to show that the wasilbaki, Exhibit K, in which tenancy right was claimed was known and recognised by the plaintiff? The explanation seems to be this—the arrangement as to ascertaining the amount due from the tenants would appear to have been made between Mr. Hudson and Matuk Lall, and it was the latter's gomashta who attended to watch the landlord's interest; the payment of the Rs. 138 had been made to Matuk Lal, and it was from Matuk Lal that the plaintiff came to know that the Rs. 138 had been paid by "tenants, etc.", the receipt (Exhibit 7) dated the 29th August 1896 shows this and it is signed by Matuk Lal. There is every probability that at the time of the lease the plaintiff merely inquired what sum had been found to be due from tenants and took Mr. Hudson's word for the Rs. 1,01½ stated to be still due. It might be that the plaintiff understood the passage in the kabuliyat describing Mr. Hudson as one of the tenants to refer only to the period after the expiry of the previous lease during which the Factory was cultivating the lands and paying direct to Matuk Lal. There is no witness to show that the plaintiff ever saw Exhibit K, and neither Mr. Hudson nor Gopal Lal who depose as to the drawing up of Exhibit K say that either the plainttiff or any agent of his was present when Exhibit K was drawn up. It might be argued that any businessman would have required fuller information as to what he was demising, but it has to be remembered that a reference to the Record of Rights, which the plaintiff would probably make would show him that Mr. Hudson was not recorded as having any occupancy holding in the leased property.

I am not satisfied, for the above reasons, that it can be held that it is proved that the plaintiff had notice of the contents of Exhibit K; or that, considering the rest of the document, a case of recognition by the plaintiff of Mr. Hudson's tenancy is made out.

Any recognition by Matuk Lal which may be inferred from the receipt of rent from Mr. Hudson and the attendance of his gomashta at the time when Exhibit K was prepared will be of no avail to the defendant for at that time Matuk Lal had sold the property and the title had passed from him. There is no suggestion or entry of any kind on Exhibit K to show that either the plaintiff or any one on his behalf had seen and examined the document. The omission of any entry in the Record of Rights finally published in 1896 showing that the Factory had any occupancy right in the 36 bighas odd is a most important feature of the case, showing that during the settlement operations Mr. Hudson was laying no claim to occupancy right. It is almost impossible to believe that if he had been aware of any such right he would have neglected to press his claim before the Settlement Authorities. It is urged that during the settlement operations Mr. Hudson was unable to look after his interests properly, but surely if the occupancy right was believed to exist some of the Factory amla would have brought the matter to the notice of the Settlement Officer or asked Mr. Hudson to press the claim.

I must hold, therefore, that the defendant has failed to prove that he holds coenpaney rights in the 36 bighas 7 cottas 11 dhurs or that he has been recognised as a raiyat by the landlord, the appeal should accordingly succeed.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 16—Insolvent's property, vesting of, in Court—Suit for recovery of debts barred—Permission of Court when to be obtained—Proceedings without permission, ultra vires, and not res judicata.

Under section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1908 a Court making the order of adjudication is vested with the whole property of the insolvent and no creditor to whom the insolvent is indebted in respect of any debt, provable under the Insolvency Act, has any remedy against the property of the insolvent in respect of the debt, nor can he commence any suit or other legal proceedings except with the leave of the Court and on such terms as the Court may impose. [p. 942, col. 1.]

The permission of a Court to sue an insolvent under section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1907, is contingent to the suit being brought and cannot be given afterwards and the proceedings started without such permission are ultra vires and do not constitute res judicata. [p. 942, col. 1.]

Application for revision of the order of the District Judge, Akola, dated the 14th of February 1921, in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 14 of 1920.

Mr. A. V. Khare, for the Applicants.

Mr. V. Bose, for the Non-Applicants.

JUDGMENT.—This is a revision arising out of insolvency proceedings. On 16th June 1917 Sheoram Laxman applied to the Insolvency Court for being made an insolvent. Before that, on 29th May 1917, he and his brother Jairam had transferred a half share in Survey No. 37 of Mouza Bramhi to one Musammat Moti Begum; the remaining half of the field is said to be owned by Sheoram's cousin one Purnaji. Sheoram was adjudged an insolvent on 10th November 1917. The present applicants held a Small Cause Court decree dated 19th April 1917 against Sheoram and on 30th May 1917 in execution of the decree attached the field. Objections were raised to that attachment by Musammat Moti Begum because she bought half the field, and Purnaji because he said that a half belonged to him. Those objections were allowed and the field was released from attachment. Applicants then sued making Sheoram, his brother Jairam and Purnaji and Moti Begum parties, for a declaration that the field was liable to be attached and sold in execution of their Small Cause Court decree against Sheoram. The suit was dismissed on 7th October 1919 and the dismissal was confirmed in appeal and the case was fixed for disposal to-day as Second Appeal No. 182-B of 1920.

It has been held in that litigation that the decree obtained by applicants against Sheoram was not binding on Jairam, or Purnaji, or on their shares in the field and the sale to Moti Begum by Sheoram and Jairam was a bona fide transaction. On 14th August 1919 the applicants applied to the Insolvency Court for the same relief which they claimed in the litigation. They had proved their debt in that Court: the Insolvency Court has held that the decision in the regular suit works as res judicata and, therefore, the matter could not be gone into in insolvency proceedings. An appeal against that decision having failed the present application for revision has been filed.

Now it seems to me that under section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act then in force the Court making the order of adjudication is vested with the whole property of the insolvent and no creditor to whom the insolvent is indebted in respect of any debt provable under the Insolvency Act has any remedy against the property of the insolvent person in respect of that debt nor can he commence any suit or other legal proceedings except with the leave of the Court and on such terms as the Court may impose.

The adjudication dates back to and has effect from the 16th June 1917 while the date of the plaint in declaratory suit was 28th September 1918, therefore, the present applicants could not bring that suit except with the leave of the Insolvency Court and that permission is contingent to the suit being brought and cannot be given afterwards. That being so, those proceedings seem to me ultra vires.

The case discloses a curious position. Once an objection has been allowed it is final unless a suit is brought within a year under Order XXI, rule 63. The lower Court must decide whether the order in the objection case is good law: was it passed before or after the date the adjudication goes back to? If passed afterwards the effect of the vesting order is clear; the attaching creditor has no priority over the Official Assignee and the latter is entitled to claim the attached property for the benefit of the attaching and other creditors of the insolvent. If in the present case the order in the objection case is good then any suit plaintiff could bring with the permission of the Insolvency Court to challenge it is long time-barred. If the order is bad the question arises how far had execution got when Sheoram was made bankrupt and what steps are now necessary. The suit brought by the plaintiff could not have been brought except with the permission of the Insolvency Court and the proceedings are void and do not constitute res judicata. I have to-day in second appeal disposed of civil suit. I now set aside the order of the Courts below and direct that Insolvency Court re take on its file the application of 14th August 1919 and dispose of it afresh. The costs here will abide the result. I fix Pleader's fees at Rs. 15.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

As appears from the language used by the learned Judges, the decision in Zamorin Raja Avergal of Calicut v. Unikat Karnavan Samu Nair (1) (Second Appeal No. 1079 of 1917) is in conflict with that in Achutha Menon v. Sankaran Nair (2). In those cases the tenure in question was Karamkari and nothing depended on any obligation in connection with it to perform service. In the present cases the tenure is Santhathi Brahmaswom, but it is admitted by Mr. Madhavan Nair that in them also there is no question of service and that the incidents of the Karamkari tenure will be applicable. In these circumstances, we think it necessary to have the conflict between the two decisions above referred to resolved; and we, therefore, refer to a Full Bench the question whether land held on the Karamkari or Santhathi Brahmaswom tenure is liable to forfeiture on alienation.

These second appeals coming on for hearing in pursuance of the above Order of Reference to a Full Bench before Sir John Wallis, Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim, Mr. Justice Oldfield, Mr. Justice Coutts-Trotter and Mr Justice Seshagiri Iyer on 8th November 1920, and before Sir John Wallis, Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim, Mr. Justice Oldfield, Mr. Justice Sadasiva Iyer and Mr. Justice Coutts-Trotter on 15th November 1920, and the second appeals having stood over for consideration till 18th January 1921, the Court (Sir John Wallis, C. J., Oldfield, Sadasiva Iyer and Coutts-Trotter, JJ.,) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—Speaking for myself, I do not as at present advised, differ from the judgment prepared by Sadasiva Iyer, J., but in view of the importance of this question, the conflict between Achutha Menon v. Sankaran Nair (2) and Zamorin Raja Avergal of Calicut v. Unikat Karnavan Samu Nair (1) and the fact that the members of the Bench are not in agreement on all points, I think that it will be better before disposing finally of the reference to call for a finding from the Subordinate Court as to whether in 1859 and 1867, the dates mentioned in the revised judgment of the Subordinate Judge, lands granted on the tenures known as Santhathi Brahmaswom and Adimayavana were inalienable as between the grantor and the grantee; and, if so, whether on alienation by the grantee, the grantor was entitled to resume the lands and re-enter. Fresh evidence may be taken. The finding will be submitted by the Subordinate Judge of Ottappalam within 6 months, and 10 days will be allowed for filing objections.

Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim who has left the Court concurred in these questions.

OLDFIELD, J.—I agree with the terms of the reference proposed and reserve further observations.

COUTTS TROTTER, J.—I agree and, like Oldfield, J., wish to reserve any expression of opinion at present.

SADASIVA IYER, J.—The question before the Full Bench is, whether land held on the Karamkari or the Santhathi Brahmaswom tenure is liable to forfeiture and resumption on alienation by the tenant.

The referring order shows that Mr. Madhavan Nair for the appellant admitted (and properly admitted) that a lessee holding lands either under the Karamkari tenure or under the Santhathi Brahmaswom tenure is under no obligation to perform any service to his landlord.

To avoid confusion, I would here remark that the question before us has very little to do with the incidents of service tenures,

(1) 55 Ind. Cas 380; 38 M. L. J. 275; 27 M. L. T. 111; 15 L W 61

(2) 12 Ind Cas. 1077; 36 M. 389; 22 M. L. J. 118; 10 M. L. T. 521; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 529.

Service tenures, (that is, involving performance of future service) connected with enjoyment of lands are usually of two kinds: (1) where the income of the land enjoyed is intended to be the emolument of the service and the land is enjoyed by the servant merely in order that the income thereof might be received by him as emoluments; (2) where the lands themselves have been granted to be owned by the tenant, the tenant being merely obliged to perform some service by himself or by a deputy, the income being enjoyed by the grantee in his status as owner thereof. The decisions dealing with the question of the distinction between these two classes of service tenures are, in my opinion, irrelevant for the decision of this case. The decision in 29 Travencore Law Reports 25, quoted by Mr. Ananthakrishna Iyer, related to a permanent tenure burdened with an obligation of velam service in a temple once a month, that service being one for the performance of which proper and adequate provision could be made through a deputy. That case and similar cases which held that lands held on service tenure of that kind are alienable the alienee being merely bound to make provision for the performance of the service, are not helpful for the decision of the question before us. The case in Durgadut Singh v. Rameshwar Singh(3), quoted for the respondent, has also no relevancy as it related to the alienability of land granted for the maintenance (on Babuana grant) of a junior male member and his descendants in a Raj family, the lands having been granted with the incidents of an impartible tenure and there being no incident of inalienability attached to impartible tenures except by statute law in some provinces.

I have had the advantage of studying the valuable opinion prepared in this case by Mr. Justice Seshagiri Iyer and I might at once state that I respectfully agree throughout with that opinion. As the question, however, is of far reaching importance. I might be permitted to add some thing in my own language, though I understand that that opinion might be attached to the report of this case.

The historical tradition is that the Nambudri Brahmins had the Jenm or birth-right in the ownership of the soil of the whole of the Malabar lands, the tradition being that the country itself was created for the Brahmins. The land revenue given to the Ruler was considered merely as remuneration given by the Jenm (or birth-right) owners of the land for the protection afforded by him; it was a "Kavali" or "protection" tax. The Rajahs of Malabar, (the Zamorin having been at one time their chief) and members of royal families (many of them being Stanees) had Jenmam rights in what are called "Cherikal" lands. The Devastanams were granted Jenmam rights in Dewswom lands. The Rajahkkanmar (Ruling Princes) had the right to require military assistance and contributions for military necessities from the two other classes of Jenmies, viz., Namburies and Dewaswoms. We might take it that these three above mentioned persons and institutions were the only three classes of landlords who were for a long time considered to be entitled to be Jenmies or owners in fee simple of lands in Malabar. Ordinary Nair families were attached to one or other members of the three classes of Jenmies and looked upon them as their Feudal Liege Lords. A Jenmi even when in distress would not part with the entire ownership in any of his Jenmam lands and he always resorted to Kanom and other expedients and desperately clung to the last shadow of his Jenmam rights.

Putting aside, then, the tenure of a person who had been granted lands out of a portion of whose income provision could be properly made for the performance of periodical services (especially temple services) through deputies, the incident of inalienability and the right of the landlord to forfeit and to resume on alienation were attached to the other permanent tenures in Malabar created by Jenmies on favourable rents (usually very favourable rents) according to the opinion of all the authorities who have considered the matter. The Sadar Court came to that conclusion after two years' enquiry in 1856 and the Cochin and Travancore Manuals state the same. Mr. Justice Benson and Mr. Justice Sundara Aiyar whose knowledge of Malabar tenures was profound were of the same opinion in Achutha Menon v. Sankaran Nair (2). The laboured attempt of Mr. Anantakrishna Aiyar to argue that the decision in Achutha Menon v. Sankaran Nair (2) was based on the express terms of the particular document of lease failed in my opinion, the terms prohibiting alienation relied upon being merely the statement by way of excessive caution of what was already involved in the name and nature of the created tenure. The incident of inalienability and liability to forfeiture on alienation with the right of re-entry in the landlord are attached to these tenures, not by usage (which implies the gradual growth as the result of convenience or practice in mercantile and similar transactions, the growth being spread over a long period of time, or being confined to particular trades or localities or families or institutions) but by the immemorial law of Malabar, a law more analogous to the immemorial Marumakkathayam Law prevailing in the west coast, in the matter of inheritance and succession, than to mercantile and other usages or to ordinary customary law. Such law may, of course, be also called custom or customory law. It may be that the word "usage" is also not wholly inappropriate but I should like the latter word to be confined to practices which the parties in certain particular places or engaged in particular trades or business are presumed to have in view when entering into certain classes of contracts and with reference to which the terms of such classes of contracts have to be ascertained and to the usages governing the succession to the trusteeship of particular local temples or local Mutts or governing particular families and so on, and not to fairly widespread rules governing tenures and legal rights with reference to which well-known and defined nomenclatures have been immemorially employed. To all perpetual leases of the lands now under consideration, namely, Anubhavam, Adimayavana, Santhathi Brahmasam and Karankari were attached these conditions against alienation, the dignity and status of the grantee and his family or the dignity and status of the grantor and his family (or both) having been considered to be closely wound up with such conditions. Section 10 of the Transfer of Property Act allows a landlord who has leased his property, even for a term of years, to insert a condition for the benefit of the landlord restraining the lessee from alienating the lease-right on pain of forfeiture and resumption. I do not, therefore, see anything against public policy or anything unreasonable in the condition attached to these ancient tenures granted permanently as a matter of favour by the landlord (who was usually the manager of an Illom, a Kovilagam or a Devasvam with limited powers of alienation) the condition, namely, that no alienation should be made by the lessee on penalty of forfeiture and reversion to the landlord. These grants, though against the pecuniary interests of the grantor, whether Stanam or Devasvam or Karnavan and Illom, have been recognised by Courts, [See Mana Vikraman, Rajah of Calicut v. Sundaran Pattar (4)] because they were customary and they added to the dignity of the family or Devaswom or Stanam, and also because there was this right reserved of resumption on alienation or on failure of heirs in the grantee's family, and hence there was a chance of revision to the grantor's Illom or Devasvam or Kovilagam The Courts have, therefore, allowed such onerous tenures of a permanent character to be created by Illoms, Sthanis and by Devasvams so as to be binding upon succeeding Karnavans, Urallers and Stanees. To hold that the above ancient law governing these tenures prohibiting alienation on pain of forfeiture and reversion has been abrogated by custom or usage would require, in my opinion, proof of an almost conclusive character extending over several decades and accepted as law by the landlord and I am very doubtful whether such a custom, even if, could be proved, involving as it does injury to the rights of religious trusts like Devasvams, would be legally valid. The law applicable to these ancient tenures can, of course, be changed by Statute. If it could be changed by the growth and establishment of a contrary custom, the establishment of that custom should not be treated as proved except on very conclusive evidence, Courts usually holding that evidence to establish an alleged new custom contrary to what has been recognised as an old established custom should be much more cogent than even the proof considered usually necessary to establish a custom contrary to general law. That there is no Statute changing the law of of these tenures is admitted. As regards the creation of a subsequent contrary customary law, there is nothing except the opinion of the Bench which decided Zamorin Raja Avergal of Calicut v. Unikat Kornavan Samu Nair (1) and the evidence adduced in that case. But in that case the learned Judges held, not that the old law attaching well known incidents to these tenures had been changed by subsequent custom, but that there never was any law or custom attaching such incidents to these tenures. In expressing that opinion, they (if I may say so with great respect) not only went against the law till then settled, but even against the opinion of the Judge of the lower Court (in that case) who held that till 1896 the custom (or what I would rather call the law) attaching the incident of inalienability was clearly established and did prevail. As regards cases of alienation after 1896, the lower Appellete Court in that case said that subsequent to that year, in a particular area called Manhalur Cherkakal there have been a number of instances of alienations "evidences the growth of a usage which has effected a breach in the wall of custom and that, so far as this Cherakkal is concerned, one of the prime requisities of custom, its continuity and concordance, is not established in this case by the plaintiff." In fact, the Subordinate Judge's view was that there was a custom but it had "fallen into desuetude" after 1896 and that there have been inroads into that custom so as to shake its continuity and uniformity and that the process is going on."

The learned Judges who decided Zamorin Raja Avergal of Calicut v. Unikat Kornavan Samu Nair (1) threw the onus of proving the custom of inalienability even before 1896 on the landlord and, in my opinion, with the greatest respect, they were in error in doing so. So far as "usage" after 1896 is concerned, the fact that many lands held on such tenures have been alienated after that date and that in some cases the landlord accepted rents from the alienees (it may have been on payment of a consideration for such recognition) cannot be accepted as proving a valid custom superseding the ancient law without further and cogent proof that the landlords had notice of the alienations and accepted the position that such alienation did not give them the legal right to resume the lands. Without proving such a consciousness on the part of the landlords that the immemorial law had been superseded by a newly established custom mere evidence of alienations by tenants is of very little value. I find, on going through the printed papers in that case, that two important witnesses therein, namely, one Mr. T. V. Venkateswara Aiyar, a practising Vakil of 40 years standing, and one Mr. Kalu Eradi, also possessing very great experience, gave evidence that in their opinion the old immemorial law of inalienability persisted up to the date of their giving evidence. That the Jenmi landlord's rights have been attempted to be encroached upon during two or three decades past by all kinds of tenure-holders under them is well known, but such attempts cannot be said to have established a new custom changing the old law as regards the tenures in question. The rather sustained attempt on the part of all kinds of tenants during 20 or 25 years past may have been partly the natural result of the oppressive conduct of many Malabar Jenmies in the matter of the grant of Melcharths over the heads of tenants of long standing, and it was probably also due to the change of general attitude on the part of tenants towards Jenmies, an attitude which was formerly (even in the case of Kanam tenants) that of a social inferior to an acknowledged social superior, but is no longer so in most cases, a fairly large proportion of Kanamdars and other tenure-holders and assignees from such tenure-holders being in recent times recruited from influential legal practitioners, Government servants and business men who of course cannot look upon themselves as holding a position of undue dependence on their landlords in the matter of dealings with the land held by them.

In a recent Privy Council case Rao Kishore Singh v. Musammat Gahenabai (5) the Judicial Commissioner's Court had held, as regards an old family custom of inheritance varying from the ordinary Hindu Law (which custom stands on a distinctly inferior position to the custom of inalienability of the tenures under consideration) that that family custom though once existing and operative had ceased to be so, "either because the primitive condition out of which it sprang had ceased to exist and, therefore cessat ratio cessat lex," or "because owing to the improvement in education and the spread of socialistic opinion consequent thereon, the custom has been so gradually but steadily and persistently encroached upon that it has, as it were, been eaten away and has ceased to be observed or applied....." But their Lordships of the Privy Council observe (page 740*) that "where a custom has up to quite recent times outlived 'the condition of things which gave it birth' the principle embodied in the expression. cessat ratio cessat lex does not apply." The Judicial Commissioner's Court had further observed that "the advance of socialism in the family due to education and the evanescence of all real authority in the head" and the assertion of a right on the part of a younger member of the family to what used to be granted to him "as a favour" might change the family custom of inheritance long prevailing. There Lordships say, as regards the above reasoning,—"It is unnecessary for their Lordships to determine whether this reasoning would be sound as applied to any case," thus indicating grave doubts as to the soundness of such reasoning. The family custom in that case was a matter of a few centuries whereas the law of the tenures in this case is one which had prevailed for at least ten centuries before the date (1896) referred to in the judgment in Zamorin Raja Avergal of Calicut v. Unikat Karnavan Samu Nair (1). Their Lordships of the Privy Council, while indicating the trend of their opinion, decided on the facts of that case that the old family custom had not been changed notwithstanding that in January 1865 the members of the family including the head of the family had acted in a manner which contravened the family custom and that the junior members in the family for several generations had enjoyed properties and other allowances independently of the head of the family to which they respectively belonged and notwithstanding that the Government had made settlements in 1865 with the head of the family and a junior member which purported to create rights which cannot be claimed according to the family custom. If the transaction, dating about 60 years before the suit was filed, contravening the family custom could not be held to destroy that custom. I think it follows a fortiori that a general territorial custom which remained in force for several centuries could not have been abrogated on the date this suit was brought. The defendant's written statements in the present suit do not admit the existence of the custom at any time and its abrogation by a contrary custom which has invariably prevailed afterwards but deny vaguely that the tenures are inalienable I would, therefore, answer the reference (following Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar's opinion) that lands held under the Karankari or Santhathi Brahmaswam tenure are liable to be forfeited on alienation if no valid contract to the contrary binding on the grantor or his successors is established, and that the lands held thereunder can be resumed by the grantor or his successors and re entered upon the alienation by the tenant without the landlords' consent.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment the Subordinate Judge of Ottapalam submitted the following

FINDING.—These appeals have been remitted to this Court by their Lordships of the Full Bench for a finding on the following issue :—

"Whether in 1859 and 1867, the dates mentioned in the revised judgment of the Subordinate Judge (in revised Appeal Suits Nos. 770 and 771 of 1913 on the file of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Palghat at Calicut), lands granted on the tenures known as 'Santhathi Brahmaswom and Adimayavana' were inalienable as between the grantor and the grantee, and, if so, whether on alienation by the grantee the grantor was entitled to resume the lands and re-enter ?"

SCHWABE, C. J.—This is a case of importance and of some difficulty. It has been very fully and ably argued before us and, I think, we are in a position to give our judgment without reserving it further.

The matter has been referred to the Full Bench by reason of a difference of opinion among the Judges who had to consider the same matter before. In the case in Achutha Menon v. Sankaran Nair (2) Benson and Sundara Iyer, JJ., took the view that in holdings of the nature in question in this case there was no right of alienation and that on alienation the landlord had a right to re-enter. The wording of the document in that case differs from the wording in this case in that it expressly forbids alienation, but the judgment does not go on that ground alone but also on the ground that alienation necessarily involves a right on the part of the landlord to re-enter. The other case is Zamorin Raja Avergal of Calicut v. Unikat Karnavan Samu Nair (1). That matter came before Ayling and Krishnan, JJ., and was sent back by them for further enquiry as to the alleged custom. After further enquiry it was held by them that such grants did not involve forfeiture on alienation. In that case the grant was of a somewhat different character and of a more recent date.

The question to be decided in this case is, whether a grant of land as a Santhathi Brahmasam to be held by the grantee "for all time without power of surrendering and without being dispossessed", or possibly "without vacating" instead of "without power of surrendering" is inalienable, and if inalienable, whether there is a right of re-entry in the landlord on alienation. The question whether such a grant is alienable or not is one which it is unnecessary for us to decide, if we come to the conclusion that on alienation the landlord has not the remedy of re-entry because in this case the question is, whether the tenant having made the alienation the landlord can re-enter. I am not prepared myself to say on the materials at present before us whether alienation is or is not forbidden by the grant or by custom. The question whether it is forbidden by the grant turns on the translation of words which might mean "without power of surrendering" and might also mean "without vacating." Whether there is a custom in regard to such grants against alienation is a difficult question and there is undoubtedly evidence before the Court that such a custom exists. Whether that evidence is sufficient is a different matter on which I do not desire to express an opinion. It has also been pressed upon us that, if there is such a custom, it is a custom which has become part of the common law of Malabar and as such is fixed and cannot be altered by any means except Statute. I am not prepared to assent to that proposition and I think that it is a matter which would require very careful consideration. But in the view that I take of this case it is not necessary to express a definite opinion on that point.

This matter came before this Court and was referred back to the Subordinate Judge to ascertain whether this alleged custom against alienability and in favour of forfeiture on alienation existed or not and we have his report before us. He has found that at the date of this grant, i. e., 1866, there was a custom against alienation and a custom in favour of the landlord's power of re entry upon alienation. This is a question of mixed law and fact. As far as the facts are concerned, I think we are bound by his finding of fact provided, of course, there was some evidence to support that finding; but whether, taking those facts as found by him, they amount to sufficient evidence of custom is a question of law,—a question on which it is open to us to review his decision and to express our own views. The facts as found by him are very fully set out in his findings and report and his decision is based on two lines of evidence: first, the written evidence from books in the nature of text books, reports and so on; the other, the oral testimony given before him. Taking first the text-books and other documentary evidence on which it is clear he mainly bases his view, these books on examination do not in my view show that at any time it was part of the common law of Malabar that a landlord was entitled to forfeiture of such a grant as this on alienation by the tenant. Reliance was mainly placed on the reports of proceedings of the Sudder Court which are added as an Appendix to the notes on the draft of the Bill relating to Malabar Land Tenures by Sir Charles Turner, Chief Justice of this Court, published in 1885. The report of the proceedings of the Sudder Court referring to tenures of this description states that they are inalienable. It is not stated in very clear language and as regards one particular kind the statement is only contained as a side note, but the Sudder Court Proceedings do not state that there was any right of re entry on alienation. Sir Charles Turner himself in his report in dealing with the particular tenure here in dispute does not even set out the law against alienation though it would look on an examination of his report that this is only a case of his having omitted to mention it, but there is not one word in his report as regards any right of re-entry. The next document we are referred to, and which is earlier in date, is Mr. Graeme's Glossary which on examination clearly shows nothing of that kind. We are then referred to the works of Mr. Wigram and Mr. Moore. These gentlemen were both Judges in Malabar and had ample opportunity of knowing what the custom was and what the practice was in Malabar at about the same time as Sir Charles Turner was making his report, and it is a very remarkable thing, if the custom alleged in this case really did exist, that neither of these gentlemen seems to have heard of it, for both state that this kind of tenure is inalienable, and both suggest that if the matter came before the Court it would very possibly refuse to hold that the grant was resumble. I refer particularly to a passage at page 143 of Mr. Wigram's book. He says:—"There is a singular absence of judicial authority in respect of these grants, and it is doubtful how far in the present day the Courts would recognise the grantor's power of resumption" That seems to be dealing with the power of resumption on failure of heirs in the grantee's family which he had mentioned above and does not seem to refer to a supposed power of re entry on breach of the condition against alienation. It is remarkable, in my view, that these two writers should have been silent on a matter so important if it was so certain as to become a part of the law of Malabar. Next, there is a statement in the Cochin Manual which is a more recent publication, that in Cochin, where we are told that the tenure is the same as in Malabar, there is a custom against alienation and for forfeiture on alienation. We do not think that this is a statement which we can act upon in arriving at a conclusion whether such an alleged custom exists in Malabar. The result is that, in my view, the documentary evidence of the kind I have indicated, far from supporting the alleged custom, contains nothing which can be regarded as any evidence of its existence.

Passing to the verbal evidence and accepting the view of the Subordinate Judge of the accuracy of the testimony of the two learned Vakils who appeared as witnesses before him, in my judgment that testimony does not provide nearly sufficient facts on which to say that there is a definite settled custom to the effect contended for. They only gave their opinions, and for purposes of opinion we have apparently before us as much material as they had except such recollection as they had of cases which they had been connected with. Their opinions are quite clearly based for the most part on the same documentry evidence as we have just been considering and which, in my view, does not contain the statements as to the custom which the witnesses thought it contained. The rest of their evidence is their recollection of cases in which they had been engaged. I cannot think that the Subordinate Judge attached great importance to this part of their evidence because they were dealing with cases which would be on record and which the proper way to prove would be by production of the records and not by mere statements of the Vakil engaged in the case to the effect that he remembered a case in which he had been engaged in which there was such and such a thing decided. A search has been made and no one has been able to produce any record of a case which has decided this point. We are unable to say, for we have not before us the records of those cases, whether the facts of those cases were the same as the facts in this case; we do not know what evidence was given of custom in those cases and what the grounds of decision in those cases were; and if those cases did decide any thing of the kind that in itself would not be such evidence of custom as would be enough to establish a definite custom within the meaning of recognised rules.

Therefore, I have come to the conclusion that neither in the written evidence nor in the oral evidence was there enough to establish a custom in favour of a right of re-entry of a landlord of such tenure on alienation by the tenant.

PHILLIPS, J.—I agree and add that I am not now expressing any opinion on the other question which was referred to the Subordinate Judge, viz., the question as to alienability.

RAM CHHATTAR AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS NOS. 1 AND 2—APPELLANTS

RAM LAL—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT

Hindu Law—Alienation by father—Son's pious obligation—Alienation invalid—Sons, whether bound—Mortgage by father—Legal necessity, proof of, to bind sons—Simple obligation against sons—Limitation, starting point of.

A transfer by a Hindu father which is admittedly invalid in its inception, cannot become valid on the death of the father and be enforced against the sons merely on the ground of their pious duty under the Hindu law to discharge their father's debt [p. 951, col. 1]

In the case of a mortgage made by a Hindu father, the son is not liable for the debt on the death of the father in the absence of proof of necessity. The remedy of the creditor on the basis of the son's pious duty is not co-extensive with his remedy on foot of a binding security. [p. 951, col. 2]

A suit against the sons on the simple obligation created by a bond executed by their father must be brought within six years from the date of the bond and limitation against the sons does not begin to run from the date of the father's death. [p. 952, col. 1]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 25th February 1920, confirming that of the Munsif, Utraula, dated the 17th December 1919.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellants.

Mr. Aditya Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit to enforce a mortgage, which was executed on the 14th of May 1907, by one Jokhan, who is now dead and is represented by his sons, Ram Chhattar and Bholai, who are the appellants in this case. The term of the mortgage was two years and the debt became payable on the 14th of May 1909. The plaintiff in whose favour the mortgage was made asked for a decree for sale of the mortgaged property.

It is admitted that the plaintiff had not pleaded in this case that there was any legal necessity for the mortgage. It is also an admitted fact that the sons who contested the suit, did not put forward any plea to the effect that the debts have been incurred for unlawful or immoral purposes.

Both the Courts below have decreed the claim and directed the mortgaged property to be sold. They relied upon a proposition which is laid down in a Bench ruling of this Court reported in 6 Oudh Law Journal p. 297 [Mohammad Baqar Ali Khan v. Hazari Lal (1).] There can be no doubt that the dictum upon which both the Courts below have relied justified the passing of the decree; but it has been argued before me that as a matter of law the proposition laid down by the Bench is erroneous.

If this statement of the law as laid down by the Bench were not, as I find it to be, obiter dictum, I should have been obliged to refer this case for consideration to a Bench. But a reference to the report shows that, for the purposes of deciding the case which was before the Bench, there was no necessity for the learned Judges to lay down the proposition. I am, therefore, free to disregard it if I disagree with them as I do. The judgment in question purports to contain an exposition of the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the well known case of Sahu Ram Chandri v. Bhup Singh (2).

The particular proposition upon which the lower Courts have relied is to be found at page 306 of the report in Volume 6 of the Oudh Law Journal and is stated as follows:—

"2. A transfer by a father although originally invalid under the principles stated in paragraph 1 is given effect to against the sons on the death of the father provided that the transfer was to discharge or secure a debt not for immoral purposes, owing to the pious obligation of the sons to discharge such a debt of their father."

It seems that the learned Judges held that this is a proposition which can legitimately be derived from the judgment of the Privy Council, in the case just referred to. With this I am unable to agree. There is nothing in the judgment of their Lordships which either directly or indirectly supports this proposition. On the contrary it appears to me that their Lordships were of opinion that such a mortgage could not be enforced against the sons merely on the ground of their pious duty under the Hindu Law to discharge their father's debts. It is not necessary to refer at length to the report of the judgment of their Lordships. It is, I think, sufficient to point out one passage to be found at page 444* of the report where it is said that "in short, responsibility to meet the father's debts is one thing and the validity of the mortgage over the joint estate is quite another thing."

I am unable to see on what principle a transfer by a father, which admittedly is in its inception invalid, can become a valid transfer merely by the accident of the father's death. Moreover, the proposition which is laid down by the learned Judges of this Court is in direct conflict with the Full Bench ruling of the Allahabad Court in Chandradeo Singh v. Mata Prasad (3). That case was cited with approval in the judgment of their Lordships in the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2). As was pointed out in the Allahabad case, the remedy of the creditor on the basis of the sons' pious duty is not co-extensive with his remedy on foot of a binding security. The case which the Allahabad Court had to deal with was similar to the case now before us; and there, in the absence of proof of legal necessity, they refused to enforce as against the sons a mortgage which had been executed by their father. The decision of both the Courts below on this point, therefore, must be set aside.

There remains another question. The sons undoubtedly being under a pious obligation to discharge the debts of their father were liable to have a simple money, decree passed against them. It is urged, however, that in the present case any claim for a simple money decree is barred by limitation. The lower Appellate Court seems to have thought that the claim was not barred because, in its view, limitation against the sons began to run from the date of the father's death. This, in my opinion, is an erroneous statement of the law.

The suit is for the recovery of a debt which was owing from the father of the defendants and as the period of mortgage was two years it necessarily follows that limitation for the simple money claim began to run from the 14th of May 1909. The period of limitation is six years, the document being a registered document and, therefore, limitation expired in May 1915, whereas the present suit was not brought till July 1919. A suit against the sons on the simple obligation created by the bond executed by their father must be brought within six years from the date of the bond. It follows, therefore, that any claim for a simple money-decree in the present case was barred by limitation. I may add that, in my opinion, the pious obligation resting upon the sons does not extend to the payment of time barred debts.

The only other matter which is raised before me is a dispute regarding the rate of interest. I should not be disposed to interfere in this matter; but in any case the point is immaterial in view of the findings which I have already come to. The suit must be dismissed.

I allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and direct that the suit of the plaintiff be remanded to the Court of first instance for trial with reference to the allegations made about the payment of the antecedent debt in paragraph 4 of the plaint in the manner required by law. The Trial Court should re frame the issue so as to cover that point and allow the parties to produce evidence relevant thereto. The costs here and hitherto will abide the result.

The transfer by a tenant of an absolute occupancy holding by gift with the consent of the malguzar, even though it is a subsequent consent, is equivalent to a surrender to him by the tenant and a fresh grant by him to the donee. [p. 953, col. 2.]

In respect of surrenders an absolute occupancy right is a tenancy and not a proprietary right. [p. 953, col 2.]

In a suit for possession the plaintiffs having no title cannot succeed on the weakness of the defendant's title when he is in possession. [p. 954, col. 1.]

A landlord is entitled to lease a parcel of land with the condition that the lessee is to have all the rights and liabilities that an absolute tenant has and though such a lessee may not be called an absolute occupancy tenant as defined in section 59 of Act XI of 1898 or section 4 of Act I of 1920 yet his rights and liabilities and legal status would be the same whatever he is called. Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 5th of January 1921.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. O. Hoy, M. R. Indurkar and B. G. Pandit, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The first two defendants are brothers with identical interests in this case. The second never appeared in the suit and it will be convenient to speak of them both as one person. The third defendant was a transferee from the first two, and went out of the case at an early stage on a compromise. The facts with which we are now concerned are as follows. In addition to owning other property, one Govind Bhat was the absolute occupancy tenant of certain land. Shortly before his death, in 1915, he made an oral Will leaving all his property, including the tenancy, to the defendant-appellant subject to certain conditions in regard to the maintenance of his widow and the building of a temple and a well and the performance of other acts of piety, all of which have been carried out. After his death disputes arose between Kaveri Bai, his widow, and the defendant, and eventually she executed a deed of gift of all the property in his favour on 16th June 1900. This was by way of compliance with the wishes of her deceased husband and of carrying out the terms of his oral Will. The malguzar consented to the transfer and has accepted the defendant as the absolute occupancy tenant of the land. Kaveri Bai died in 1918 and thereupon the plaintiffs who are the next reversionary heirs of Govinda Bhat filed this suit for the recovery of all his property. In respect of the absolute occupancy tenancy it has been held in the lower Appellate Court that the defendant could not acquire any title to it under the Will as was laid down in Anandi Bai v. Harlal Brahman (1), and that the widow's deed of gift ceased to be operative after her death. Against this decision the defendant has come here in second appeal.

2. As respondents in this Court the plaintiffs filed a cross objection in which they impeached the finding of the lower Appellate Court as to the validity of Govinda Bhat's Will. This was most carelessly worded. What they meant to attack was the finding of fact that the Will was actually made, not its validity as that is unquestionable if it was ever made. Their attack on this finding is based solely on the allegation that in arriving at it the learned Additional District Judge left out of consideration the very important fact that in the year following that in which Govind Bhat died his widow executed a deed of gift of the property in favour of the alleged legatee, which she never would have done if he had made a Will. It is clear that this fact was prominently before the mind of the learned Judge all through his discussion of the evidence as to the making of the Will. He considered that Kaveri Bai executed the deed of gift in compliance with the expressed wishes of her husband as practical execution of this Will and to settle once for all the disputes between herself and the defendant. The cross-objection must be dismissed, and all the costs connected with it will be paid by the respondents.

3. I can see no difficulty in regarding the transfer by gift with the consent of the landlord, even though it was a subsequent consent, as a surrender to him by the widow and a fresh grant by him to the defendant. In respect of surrenders the absolute occupancy right is a tenancy and not a proprietary right. On page 70 of Woodfall's Law of Landlord and Tenant the ruling in Doe d Hull v. Wood (2) is stated to have been this "Where two persons being tenants from year to year of two closes under different lessors agreed verbally to exchange them which they did and then the arrangement was mentioned to a person who was steward of both the lessors and who expressed his assent to it, it was held that this was evidence of new demises and of surrender by operation of law of the previous interests of the tenant." The same view of a transfer of an occupancy holding was taken by Ismay, J. C., in Piare v. Gopal Jhira (3) and in Sunder v. Sitaram (4) Batten, A. J. C., said that, in his opinion, an arrangement whereby an occupancy tenant gives up a definite portion of his holding to the landlord who agrees to the payment of a certain rent for the remainder which the tenant retains "is not to be distinguished from surrender of the entire holding with a fresh lease of some of the fields comprised in it."

4. The gift by the widow to the defendant was then to begin with a surrender to the landlord and such a surrender was held by Drake-Brockman, J. C., in Dajiba v. Raghunath (5) to be binding on the reversioners. The learned Pleader for the respondents cited Bhura v. Ramrao (6) as authority for the proposition that a Hindu widow's interest in an absolute occupancy tenancy which has devolved on her at her husband's death is the same in all respects as the estate of a Hindu widow in land inherited from her husband. The judgment, however, makes the important exception that the limitations of her interest in the tenancy are subject to the provisions of the Tenancy Act as to surrender and alienation. The learned Pleader further argued that, even if the gift can be regarded as a surrender, and a fresh grant and the surrender is binding on the reversioners, still the defendant can have no title, as the landlord cannot create an absolute occupancy tenancy; that was done for the first and last time by the Government in 1865. That is, of course, a matter between the defendant and the malguzar and the plaintiffs having no title cannot succeed on the weakness of the defendant's title when he is in possession.

5. But I can see no reason for thinking that a landlord cannot create an absolute occupancy tenancy. If he leases a parcel of land with the condition that the lessee is to have all the rights and liabilities that an absolute occupancy tenant has, which he is undoubtedly entitled to do, it may be said that the lessee cannot be called an absolute occupancy tenant as defined in section 39 of Act XI of 1898 or section * of Act I of 1920. But his rights and liabilities and legal status are the same whatever he is called. If it is really necessary to preserve the distinction he might be given the cumbrous description of "a person having all the rights and liabilities but not the same of an absolute occupancy tenant." That, however, would make no difference to anybody in the world except the Patwari, who would get a little extra work.

6. I am conscious of a distinct inclination to the view that, on a careful examination of the principles of the Hindu Law, it would be found that a gift made by a widow in accordance with the expressed dying wishes of her husband, especially one entailing the many spiritually beneficial acts that were performed in this case would be binding on the reversioners. I also venture, with all respect, to express a doubt as to the soundness of the ruling in Anandi Bai v. Harlal Brahman (1) on which the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court relied in view of the later ruling in Ragho v. Sadoo (7) and the words of section 5 of the present Tenancy Act (I of 1920). These matters do not, however, need discussion, as the dispute between the parties is decided by what I have already said. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside. In lieu thereof a decree will issue dismissing the plaintiffs' suit against the first two defendants, and the plaintiffs must pay all the costs incurred by the first defendant in all three Courts.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 17, 49—Attestation—Knowledge of contents—Estoppel—Settlement—Registration.

Attestation of a deed by itself does not estop a person attesting the deed from denying anything except that he has witnessed the execution of the deed. Knowledge of the contents of the deed ought not to be inferred from the mere fact of the attestation, though an attestation may take place in circumstances which would show that the witness did in fact know of the contents of the deed. [p. 957, col. 2.]

The appellant and his two uncles were co-sharers in certain villages, of which the appellant was the registered proprietor. A deed of settlement signed by the appellant and addressed to his two uncles provided that the appellant was to manage the villages taking a salary and paying the expenses, that, if there was a loss, the uncles should make good the amount in respect of their shares on demand and that, in case of default, the uncles should lose their shares in the villages. This deed was presented for registration by one of the uncles and duly registered. In the years following, there was loss in respect of one of the villages On a demand by the appellant, the uncles wrote a letter to him that he was liable for the profit or loss accrued or accruing, that they were not to take shares and pay the loss and that he might manage as he liked. Subsequently, the uncles transferred their shares in the village in question by a deed which the appellant attested as a witness:

Held, (1) that, although the deed of settlement was only signed by the appellant, the arrangement made under it was a perfectly valid one, as it was accepted by the uncles and acted upon by the appellant: [p. 957, col 1.]

(2) that the subsequent letter did not require registration as it was not an instrument of transfer but was only a piece of evidence showing that the uncles accepted the terms in the earlier deed of settlement and admitted that the condition upon which the first agreement was to operate had in fact arisen; and [p 957, col. 1.]

(3) that the appellant was not estopped from denying that he was a party to the subsequent transfer by the uncles as there was no proof of his knowledge of the contents of the document he attested [p. 958, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree and a judgment of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Central Provinces, reversing a decree of the Second Additional District Judge, Amraoti.

FACTS.—The suit was instituted by the first respondent against the appellant and others for partition and possession of a 8 anna share in a village. The facts are sufficiently set out in their Lordships' judgment.

The District Judge dismissed the suit but on appeal the Judicial Commissioner passed a decree directing partition and possession. Hence the present appeal.

Mr Dube, for the Appellant.—The Judicial Commissioner was wrong in thinking that the appellant was estopped.

Nanda Lal [Banga Chandra] Dhur Biswas v. Jugat Kishore Acharjya Chowdhury (1). The letter of April 11, 1910 did not affect title to the property the appellant's title was established by the earlier deed of settlement. The letter is admissible in evidence to show that the uncles accepted the terms of the settlement and admitted that the event referred to therein had occurred. (Section 49 of the Indian Registration Act).

The appellant and his uncles acted upon the terms of the settlement and the letter for a long time and effect must be given to it apart from technicalities.

Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli (2).

The appellant's attestation of the deed does not estop him from denying that he knew its contents or consented to them.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., and Parikh, for the Respondents.—There is evidence that the appellant attested the deed knowing its contents and his attestation led the transferee to believe that he consented to the transaction. The transferee was a bona fide purchaser. The attestation amounts to a representation by which the appellant was estopped.

Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha (3).

Apart from the letter of 1910, there was nothing to show that the uncles had relinquished their shares. The letter is useless in the absence of registration, for purposes of evidence. It is not admissible without registration. The deed of transfer provided for transfer of all the villages.

Mr. Dube replied.

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—The plaintiff in the suit out of which this appeal has arisen is the first respondent. His plaint asked that a joint estate in certain property known as Mauza Khandal should be partitioned, and that it might be declared that he was entitled to an 8 anna share in the property. The suit was dismissed by the District Judge of East Berar, but was granted in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. The respondent's title rested on two deeds, the first, dated the 2nd February, 1914, by which two grantors, Kanhoba and Vishwanath, the sons of Raghu, purported to convey the property in question to one Hari Govind Damle for Rs. 9,100, and the second, dated the 26th June 1914, by which Hari Govind Damle conveyed the same parcels to the said respondent for Rs. 15,000. So far as the documentary title is concerned, it is complete, and if in fact Vishwanath and Kanhoba had the right to convey the two shares covered by the deed of the 2nd February 1914, there could be no answer to the respondents' claim The first question that arose in the suit and remains for decision upon this appeal is, whether those two signatories possessed that right or no, and the second, whether, if no such right existed, the appellant was estopped from setting up the defect. The dispute arises in these circumstances. The village in question was originally part of the joint estate of a joint Hindu family, which had separated before 1906, leaving this village undivided. The joint family had been constituted by the four sons of Raghu. The eldest of these, Krishna, died before the separation. The appellant Pandurang was one of the sons of Krishna, and so also were the second and third respondents. The other respondents, with the exception of No. 8, were descendants of two of the dead sons of Krishna, and respondent No. 8, Musammat Sakhubai, represented Laxman, the second son of Raghu, who was also dead. The two other sons of Raghu were, as has already been stated, Kanhoba and Vishwanath, who were each entitled to a one fourth share.

Pandurang was the registered holder of the land. In 1906 disputes, with the exact nature of which their Lordships are unacquainted, had arisen between him and the other joint members. Accordingly, on the 8th September 1906, a document was executed which has given rise to the question that has now to be determined. It was stated to be a deed of settlement by Pandurang in favour of Kanhoba and Vishwanath and Sakhubai, the widow of Laxman, and it took the form of a statement made by Pandurang to his two uncles. It sets out their relationship to him, that a partition has been effected between them and him in respect of the ancestral property, and that only certain ancestral izra villages remain, of which Mauza Khandal is one. It continues by referring to the fact that disputes had often arisen and tended to arise between them and himself, and it then proceeds to put forward the terms of the settlement. The effective part of those terms is this, that he, Pandurang, will manage in future all the village affairs and take Rs. 180 per annum as his salary and remuneration for doing it; that he will pay the necessary expenses, and that if the village profits were not sufficient to meet the expenses and there might be a loss, his two uncles should pay on account of the loss in proportion to their shares. It then concludes in this way: "If you raise contentions in future in respect of the loss, they shall not be heard, and you shall be held to have lost, under this Vyavastha patra (deed of settlement), your shares in the villages. The shares shall, however, be lost if the losses are demanded and not paid in the presence of the panch." It finally refers to a suit pending between himself and his uncles in respect of the villages, and states that it has been compromised under the settlement. That document was signed by Pandurang alone, but it was presented for registration by Vishwanath, one of the two uncles of Pandurang, and registered accordingly. Nothing appears to have been contained in the document affecting Sakhubai, and her only defence to the suit is a statement that Pandurang is estopped from disputing the sale-deed of the 2nd February 1914. Pursuant to the arrangements made in that agreement, Pandurang continued to manage the estate and to make the payments. It must also be assumed that the civil suit was compromised. It appears that in the course of management there was a loss in respect of this particular village, Mauza Khandal. The other villages, although the exact accounts have not been produced, apparently roughly balanced, but as to Mauza Khandal, there was, in 1910, a loss for the four years of a total of Rs. 1,069. The fact that this loss had been incurred was mentioned to the two uncles of Pandurang, and a letter to him in the handwriting of Vishwanath was drawn up on the 11th April 1910, and signed by both of them in these terms. "You have demanded from us Rs. 533 1 3 (rupees five hundred and thirty three, one anna and three pies) found due on account of loss in Khandal izara for four years from 1907. But we cannot pay the same. You are, therefore, liable for the profit or loss which accrued up till now and may accrue in future. We are not to take a share and pay the loss. You may make a management as you like."

It was not registered. The arrangements evidenced by those two documents would be sufficient for the purpose of conveying the shares of Kanhoba and Vishwanath to Pandurang, but the real argument that has been brought before this Board against that effect being given to these transactions is that the first document was not formally signed by Vishwanath and Kanhoba and that the second document was not registered and, therefore, could not be given in evidence. Their Lordships think that both these contentions fail. With regard to the first, the arrangement was a perfectly good one according to Hindu Law, if accepted by Vishwanath and Kanhoba and acted upon by Pandurang, even although the document was not in fact signed by the persons to whom it was addressed. That Pandurang did act upon it is beyond dispute. The only question that follows is, whether the subsequent letter was an effective instrument necessary for the purpose of transferring the property, or whether it was only a piece of evidence not constituting acceptance of the earlier proposal but showing that it had been accepted and that Vishwanath and Kanhoba, admitted that the condition upon which the first agreement was to operate had in fact arisen. Their Lordships think that the latter is the true interpretation. The document itself contains no statement of conveyance or release. It repeats that Vishwanath and Kanhoba are not to take a share and pay the losses because they are unable to do so, and read, as it must be read, as a sequel to the earlier document which had been drawn upon in 1906, it is a recognition that the share will pass as that document provides. There was consequently no need for its registration.

It is then urged that in point of fact the original document dealt with the share in all the villages as one, and the evidence goes to show that the only village with regard to which the accounts were placed before Vishwanath and Kanhoba was the village of Mauza Khandal, to which alone the letter relates. Their Lordships think that there is no weight in this contention. There would be no reason, even on the original agreement, to prevent the parties dealing with the one village instead of the three. The terms are clumsily expressed, and the letter merely shows that all parties accept the interpretation of the earlier document as permitting each share to be dealt with individually instead of all being necessarily grouped together. It is, therefore, not surprising that this contention does not appear to have been raised at any time prior to the actual hearing before their Lordships.

There remains the matter which, so far as can be gathered from the judgments in the Courts from which this appeal has proceeded has been the real controversy, and that is that whatever be the true effect of the transaction Pandurang is estopped from setting it up against the respondent. The first estoppel that is put forward, which was undoubtedly the estoppel upon which the real issue was taken, was said to arise by virtue of the fact that Pandurang had himself attested the first deed which had been executed on the 2nd February 1914 conveying the property to Damle. The issue is framed in these words: "Is defendant No. 1 (i.e., Pandurang) estopped from questioning the right, title and interest of defendants Nos. 9 and 10 (i.e., Vishwanath and Kanhoba) in the property transferred under the sale-deed dated the 2nd February 1914 on account of the fact that he attested that deed." And then a further issue is raised as to whether he attested with knowledge and consented to the transfer. Before their Lordships consider the circumstances in which that attestation took place, they think it is desirable to emphasize once more that attestation of a deed by itself estops a man from denying nothing whatever excepting that he has witnessed the execution of the deed. It conveys, neither directly nor by implication, any knowledge of the contents of the document, and it ought not to be put forward alone for the purpose of establishing that a man consented to the transaction which the document effects. It is, of course, possible, as was pointed out by their Lordships in the case of Nanda Lal [Bangi Chandra Dhur Biswas v. Jagat Kishore Acharjya Chowdhuri (1), that an attestation may take place in circumstances which would show that the witness did in fact know of the contents of the document, but no such knowledge ought to be inferred from the mere fact of the attestation. Their Lordships think that a mistake has arisen in this case, not for the first time, from assuming that attestation carries some greater weight. In the present instance the learned District Judge says in his judgment at page 47:—

"My impression is that Pandurang did not understand the nature of the consequences that may accrue from his conduct and what interpretations would be put upon the fact of his signing the deed as an attesting witness. I, therefore, hold that the defendant Pandurang is not estopped from raising the question that he was not bound by his mere signature to show that he consented to the result that he was not entitled to them."

That is the wrong way of approaching the question. Pandurang is not estopped by his mere signature unless it can be established by independent evidence that to the signature was attached the express condition that it was intended to convey something more than a mere witnessing of the execution, and was meant as involving consent to the transaction. The statements made by the learned Judicial Commissioners at page 61 of the record are even more startling, and they appear to show that the error as to the effect of attestation must be very widespread. They state there: "The mere attestation of a sale-deed does not work an estoppel unless it is pleaded and proved that such attestation has induced a belief followed by action." Estoppel does not arise from any such circumstance. As already stated, attestation itself does not effect it, nor does the belief of other parties as to the meaning of attestation affect the man who has placed his signature as a witness, unless it can be established that he knew that that belief would arise, and signed with that intent. A similar statement is to be found later on in the judgment, where the learned Judges say:—

"We think that attestation by a person who has or claims any interest in the property covered by the document must be treated, in the absence of any evidence to show that he was tricked into making the signature, prima facie as a representation by him that the title recited in the document is true and will not be disputed by him as against the obligee under the document."

Their Lordships are bound to point out that that is an entire misapprehension of the law of estoppel, and that if that misapprehension be not corrected, much mischief may be done in the administration of justice in India. They think it well to recall the precise words in which estoppel is defined in the Indian Evidence Act of 1872, section 115, which is in these terms:—

"When one person has, by his declaration, act or omission, intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true, and to act upon such belief, neither he nor his representative shall be allowed, in any suit or proceeding between himself and such person or his representative, to deny the truth of that thing."

If the clear rule there laid down had been observed, the difficulties which have embarrassed this case would not have arisen. It is then said that attestation in this particular case had greater weight because of the circumstances associated with the execution of the deed. Those circumstances, when they are carefully examined, amount to this: That it is alleged that Pandurang knew of the deed's contents; that he was warned against signing it: that he said he did not mind signing it because he had no objection and that there were circumstances from which it is possible to infer that he in fact consented to the sale. No one of these suggestions was put to Pandurang himself and their Lordships are unable to draw that inference from the other evidence. There can be no doubt that in 1910 Pandurang had obtained a formal acknowledgment of the fact that the condition under which his title to these two shares arose had in fact taken place. He must be assumed to have known that his right was then established, subject to whatever argument might be raised as to the question of registration, which obviously was not in the mind of either of the parties. He thought that the property was worth some Rs. 4,000, it was to be sold for Rs. 9,100, and the whole of the right and interest that arose to him by virtue of the fact that the Rs. 533 that were owing to him had not been paid was to disappear; he was to get nothing whatever out of it, and he was to relinquish the right to which the non-payment of the monies had given rise. It seems to their Lordships impossible to think that, in such circumstances, a man could have attested a deed for the purpose of relinquishing for no consideration whatever a right which, upon the face of the document, would have been one of great value. Their Lordships do not think that the evidence that Pandurang knew of the contents of this deed and attested for the purpose of evidencing his consent can be accepted, and the burden of establishing that contention lay upon the plaintiff. If in fact there be a practice, as is suggested from the evidence, that when the consent of parties to transactions is required, it can be obtained by inducing them by one means or another, to attest a signature of the executing parties, the sooner that practice is discontinued the better it will be for the straightforward dealing essential in all business matters.

Their Lordships, therefore, think that this estoppel has not been made out, and for the reasons already given they think that this appeal ought to be allowed. The judgment in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner should be reversed and the suit dismissed with costs, the appellant to have his costs of this appeal and in the Courts below, and they will humbly advise His Majesty to this effect.

Mr. P. A. Pandit, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—It will clear the ground if we take first the question of a document which the appellants contend ought to have been admitted in evidence in the lower Appellate Court and tender in evidence now. At or shortly after the partition in 1879 between Shriram's father, Jairam, and Jairam's brother, Tanba, the absolute occupancy holding in suit passed into the possession of Jairam. Jairam died on the 17th of June 1915 and Shriram on the 7th of June 1918. The defendants, other than Shriram's widow Rai, are the heirs of Tanba and alleged that the holding fell to the share of Tanba at the partition but Jairam was allowed by Tanba to hold and cultivate it during his lifetime. It is admitted that they signally failed to prove this allegation in the First Court. After filing their appeal in the Court of the District Judge they applied to the First Court for a review on the ground that they had discovered new and important evidence. This was a document purporting to be a letter dated Phag Sudi 10, Sambat 1956 (10th March 1900) from Jairam to Tanba in which Jairam admitted the land was Tanba's and he was entitled to hold it only till he died. This document was stated to have been found after the date of the decree in the First Court among the defendants' own paper in a "daftar", that is a place where it would naturally be, but in a village belonging to them other than that in which the land in dispute is situated. The application for a review of judgment was rejected in the First Court on the ground that the Appellate Court was already seised of the case in appeal. The document was then tendered in evidence in the Court of the District Judge and was rejected as tendered too late. I do not consider that any reason beyond a statement of these facts need be given for holding that the document was rightly rejected in the Court of the District Judge and must be rejected here.

The only other matter for considera- is the question of limitation. The facts and dates which are relevant in this connection are as follows. On the 22nd of December 1915 the absolute occupancy tenant, Shriram, gave the landlord notice of his intention to sell the land for Rs. 800, as he was bound to do under section 41 of the C. P. Tenancy Act then in force, Act XI of 1898. Within ten days the landlord replied stating that he proposed to exercise his right of pre-emption. On the 6th of January 1916 he applied to the Collector to fix the price, and it was eventually decided to be Rs 700 on the 13th of January 1917. On the 26th of January 1918 the heirs of Tanba filed a suit against Shriram claiming possession of the land as the rightful tenants, on the ground that Jairam was only the holder for life and neither he nor Shriram was the tenant at all. Shriram admitted their claim and delivered possession to them, or at least purported to do so, on the 9th of February 1918 but, apparently pro majore cautela, suffered a decree to be passed against him on the 7th of March 1918. On the 7th of June 1918 Shriram died. Then, in February 1919, the heirs of Jairam made a statement to the Settlement Officer that they were the tenants of the land and in possession of it, on which they were apparently so recorded and given a "parcha". The landlord filed this suit on the 6th of March 1919.

The learned District Judge has held that the suit is within time though the reasons he gives are by no means clear. In Dadu v. Chamru (1) Skinner, A. J. C., seemed to incline to the view that there could not be a suit for pre emption unless the sale originally intended had been carried out. This view was not definitely stated, as my learned predecessor was only concerned to show that the claim in the case before him, which was of the same character as that in the present suit, was not for specific performance of a contract but for the enforcement of a statutory right. I cannot, however, see what that statutory right, under section 41 of the C. P. Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), could be if it was not the right of pre-emption Quoting the words of Ismay, J. C., in Bharat Singh v. Dhansingh (2) that, "if the holding has been already sold the suit would be a suit to enforce a right of pre emption", the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner added: "But if it has not been sold, it must be a claim against the original tenant to enforce the landlord's claim to purchase." Unless the word "pre-emption" refers only to the right to purchase property in preference to another who has actually done so, this involves a contradiction in terms. The word appears to me to mean at least equally a purchase of property before another person, who was intending or had contracted to purchase it, had completed his purchase. Article 10 of the Schedule of the Limitation Act speaks of suits for pre-emption generally but does not provide any starting point for a case in which the sale has not taken place. It cannot, however, be argued from this that, because no starting point for limitation is provided for pre-emption suits of any other kind, therefore, the word "pre emption" is used in the first column in that limited sense. Even if this were so, it could still less be said that, therefore, the word must be used in the same limited sense in all other legislation. In section 41 of Act XI of 1898 the expression "right of pre-emption" in sub-section (5) and clause (a) of sub-section (3) read together must refer to the right which the landlord has during the month in which the tenant is forbidden by sub section (2) to proceed with the transfer.

All this, however, is little more than an academic discussion of the meaning of the word "pre emption." Article 10 of the Schedule of the Limitation Act refers in the first column to all suits for pre-emption including, as it seems to me, those in which the originally intended sale has not yet taken place. But it does not purport or attempt to provide any period of limitation for suits of that particular class, as it omits to mention in the third column any starting point from which that period could be reckoned. We are compelled, therefore, to have recourse to the omnibus Article No. 120. That allows a period of six years from the time "when the right to sue accrues." That right accrued when the landlord first became aware that the tenant did not intend to sell the land to him. When exactly this happened we need not enquire in this case, as it could not possibly be earlier than the 13th of January 1917, when the price to be paid by the landlord was fixed by the Collector, and the suit was filed less than two years and two months after that date.

(5) The view that Article 120 applies to this case is not in any way in conflict with the ruling of Ismay, J. C., in Sectaram v. Ramdayal Marwari (3) or the earlier rulings in this Court in Fatechand v. Dinanath (4) and Ramji v. Dewani (5) there cited that Article 10 applies to a suit for pre-emption under section 41 of Act XI of 1898, as in all those cases a sale had already taken place before the suit was filed. Till the rival purchaser takes possession of the property or his sale-deed is registered, Article 10 does not provide any period of limitation and Article 120, therefore, applies. When either of these events hapens, the suit is no longer one for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere than in Article 120. That Article, therefore, ceases to be applicable and Article 10 begins to apply. The appeal is dismissed and the appellants must pay all the costs of the respondents.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, Coimbatore, in Appeal Suit No. 246 of 1917, presented against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Coimbatore, in Original Suit No. 90 of 1916.

This second appeal and the memorandum of cross-objections put in by the 5th respondent coming on for hearing on 20th October 1920, the Court (Oldfield and Hughes, JJ.,) delivered the following JUDGMENT.—The lower Appellate Court has given no distinct finding on the additional Issue No. 11. We must, therefore, call on it to find clearly on that question, in what order were the mortgages of plaintiff and 8th defendant executed.

Finding is to be given on the evidence on record and returned in six weeks. Seven days are allowed for objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment the District Judge of Coimbatore submitted the following

FINDING.—I am asked to find clearly in what order the mortgages of plaintiff and 8th defendant were executed. The Sub-Judge originally found that 8th defendant who took a mortgage of Item No. 3 did so with a knowledge of the execution of the suit-bond in favour of plaintiff and that he admitted this. Consequently, he has no right of priority. In his judgment Mr. Waller stated that this was certainly not the effect of 8th defendant's evidence as he understood it and sent down the matter for a special finding on this point. Then the Sub-Judge found, in the absence of any more evidence than what he quoted, that the document in favour of 8th defendant was executed first and then the one in favour of plaintiff. On this point Mr. Waller disagreed with him and found that there was no priority for 8th defendant's mortgage.

2. The evidence is very meagre and will be re stated. Plaintiff's first witness, an attestator of both documents, states in cross-examination that Exhibit I was "written" before Exhibit A was written. What is meant by written is not clear, whether engrossing on the document, or executing it. As the word written is used it presumably means simply that the document was written out first. Eigth defendant examined as defendant's witness No. 1 says that Exhibit I was executed to him first, and it was presented for registration first. In cross examination he said he was aware of the hypothecation bond Exhibit I executed to plaintiff which the Sub Judge seems to have interpreted as meaning that, at the time of Exhibit I, he was aware of Exhibit A, thus indicating that his deed was not prior. The words, however, are not clear. In the next sentence, to the Court, he said that Exhibits A and I were executed at the same time. We are left, therefore, with indefinite and meagre materials to go upon. It cannot be clearly said that 8th defendant has proved that his document was the prior one; and I can only agree with Mr. Waller that he is not entitled to any priority. My answer to the issue sent down is that it is not clear from the evidence on record in what order the documents were executed, and that 8th defendant has not satisfied me as to the priority of his mortgage.

This appeal came on for final hearing on the 28th January 1921 before Sir John Wallis, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Oldfield.

Mr. V. C. Seshachariar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. V. T. Srinivasagopalachariar and L A. Govindaragava Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The District Judge has found that it is impossible to say whether the mortgage, Exhibit A, relied on by the plaintiff or the mortgage, Exhibit I, relied on by the 8th defendant was executed first. The 8th defendant on 6th June 1911 purchased the equity of redemption in a portion of the mortgaged property, Item No. 3 consisting of 3/10ths of the whole, in part satisfaction of his mortgage debt, the balance of which was otherwise discharged with interest on 30th October 1915.

If the 8th defendant's mortgage was executed first, he must, on the facts found, be regarded as having intended to keep alive his mortgage rights when he purchased the equity of redemption in Item No. 3.

As the District Judge has found it impossible to decide which of the two mortgages was executed first, it is not open to either of the mortgagees to claim priority over the other and they must rank pari passu as if both mortgages had been executed at the same time. A similar view was taken in Ram Ratan Sahu v. Mohant Sahu (1).

We must, therefore, set aside the decree and remand the appeal suit to the District Court for disposal according to law in the light of the above observations. Costs will abide. Stamp will be refunded.

Mr. V. R. Pandit, R. B., for the Appellants.

Mr. K. V. Deoskar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the appellant-mortgagee complains that he has not been awarded sufficient interest. The bond is dated 1906 and the debt due to the mortgagee then, which appears to have been made up of an old cash debt secured by something of the nature of zar i peshgi lease and of an old grain debt purporting to be secured by an unregistered mortgage, was valued in the mortgage-deed at Rs. 475. In lieu of this amount the mortgagor was to pay 3 manis and 4 maunds of cotton and 5 manis of Juari in 5 instalments spread over 3 years. Any defaulted instalment had to bear compound interest at 25 per cent. On 4 instalments being defaulted the whole amount was to become payable with interest at 25 per cent. At the date of the suit, viz., at the end of the year 1919, nothing had been paid. On that date the plaintiff calculated the amount due to him to be over 94 manis of cotton and nearly 58 manis of Juari, being about 152 manis of cotton and grain as against 13 manis and 4 maunds originally stipulated for. The money value of these 152 manis was stated at Rs. 26,626. Thus, while the grain and cotton had swollen by about 12 times owing to interest, its money value which the plaintiff claims to be due to him had increased by more than 50 times owing to the exorbitant rate of interest, in addition to the rise in price of grain and cotton.

The lower Court has held that the stipulations as regards interest were penal, though it has not given very clear grounds for so doing. It has relieved against the penalty and has given the plaintiff interest at the rate of 24 per cent. simple interest which cannot be called too low interest provided the lower Court was justified in relieving against the penalty. It appears perfectly clear to me that the 8⅓ manis of cotton and 5 manis of Juari payable in instalments was not the present value at the date of the bond for Rs 475, but included future interest up to the date of the last instalment. Under section 74 of the Contract Act if in an instrument in which the principal and interest have been consolidated and the total amount is payable by instalments, there is a default clause that on failure to pay an instalment, the whole sum will become at once due, such a provision is a penalty. These factors are present in this case and the stipulations as to interest undoubtedly amounted to a penalty. As I have said, I have no doubt that the 13 manis and 4 maunds did include future interest. But even if they did not, the lower Court was right in holding that the provisions regarding interest were penal. The Madras High Court has in a recent Full Bench case decided that the Court has power under section 74 of the Contract Act, as amended, even when no interest is payable until default, but interest at an exorbitant rate becomes payable on default to treat the stipulation as to the exorbitant rate payable on default as a penalty and to award reasonable compensation in lieu of such extortionate interest: vide Avathani Muthukrishnier v. Sankaralingam Pillai (1). In a recent Calcutta case, Khagaram Das v. Ram Sonkar Das (2), Sir Asutosh Mookerji, J., has held that the Court is competent to grant relief whenever the rate of interest appears to the Court to be penal.

I have no doubt that the lower Court was right in holding that the stipulations as to interest in this case were penal and in giving a reasonable rate of interest,

The appeal is dismissed with costs. The time for payment is extended from the 29th April 1921 to the 29th April 1922. interest to run on the amount decreed at 6 per cent. per annum from the 29th April 1921.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 31, scope of—Sanction to sell minor's property—Necessity, recital of—Suit by minor to set aside alienation—Burden of proof—Fraud—Procedure.

An order of a District Judge giving sanction to a guardian of a minor to sell the minor's property must recite the necessity for the sale as required by section 31 (2) of the Guardians and Wards Act. [p. 965, col. 2.]

An order of sanction by a District Judge authorising the guardian of a minor to sell his property does not cure inherent defects that may exist in the sale. Sanction is prima facie evidence that the transaction is a good one but the minor may at any future time show that it was fraudulent or improper. [p 965, col. 2]

Where in a suit to set aside an alienation made by a guardian of a minor the evidence on both sides is before the Court, there is nothing to prevent the Court from coming to the conclusion that the sale is an improper one and not for the benefit of the minor, though the burden of proof in the first instance lies upon the person seeking to set aside the alienation. [p. 965, col. 2.]

Per Ramesam, J.—The effect of sanction under section 31 of the Guardians and Wards Act is that the burden of proof is shifted to the plaintiff and it is not necessary that fraud has to be made out on the part of the purchaser to impeach the transaction. [p. 966, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Third Temporary Subordinate Judge, Guntur, in Original Suit No. 6 of 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. C. Sambasiva Rao, for the Appellants.—The Subordinate Judge is in error in going into the question of the necessity for the sale. The sale was sanctioned by the District Court under the Guardians and Wards Act and the order of Court protected the purchaser and passed a good title to him by his purchase.

Mr. P. Narayanamurthi, for the Respondents.—The sanction of the District Court does not bar the minor's right to question the sale. The effect of the sanction was only to throw on the plaintiffs the onus of proving that the sale was fraudulent or improper. And if the Court could find materials for setting it aside it can do so. Sikher Chund v. Dulputty Singh (1), Jugul Kishori Chowdhurani v. Ananda Lal Chowdhuri (2).

The District Court's order does not also recite the purpose of the sale.

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—This suit was brought by the plaintiffs to set aside alienations made during their minority by their guardian and the appeal relates to Item No. 10 of Schedule A. This property was mortgaged under Exhibit IX B in 1901 by the plaintiff's mother after the death of their father in 1899. In 1908 the plaintiffs' maternal uncle, Panakalu, who had been appointed as guardian of the minors under the Guardians and Wards Act, applied to the District Court for permission to sell a portion of the property to discharge the mortgage and obtained sanction on the 24th February 1908. The mortgage, according to the recital in the mortgage document, was for the purpose of borrowing Rs. 600 for the marriage of the plaintiffs. These boys were then aged three and six years respectively. One of them was married 15 years later and the other is still unmarried. As pointed out by the Subordinate Judge, the recital as to the purpose for which the money was borrowed was obviously false. The sale deed, Exhibit IX, in favour of the 39th defendant of 9 acres for Rs. 1,500 was dated 1st April 1908. The purchaser took a transfer of the mortgage on the 28th March and five days after his sale he sold the same property under Exhibit IX A to the 41st defendant for Rs 1,800 having previously received an advance on the 29th March before he got the transfer in his own name. The 39th defendant was a Gumasta to the plaintiff's guardian, Panakalu. The above circumstances are enough to cast a great deal of suspicion on the transaction and to suggest the existence of a conspiracy between the guardian and his Gumasta and the purchaser from that Gumasta to defraud the minors. There are no reasons to treat 41st defendant as a bona fide purchaser having no knowledge of the defects of the previous sale. But in appeal it has been urged that the sanction of the Court under the Guardians and Wards Act will give a good title to the purchaser. The Court's sanction, however, was not given according to the requirements of the law and it is in itself not free from suspicion. The affidavit presented by the guardian to the District Court, Exhibit IX (c), contains an incorrect statement that the mortgage bore interest at Re. 1-9-0 compound interest, whereas the truth was that interest was due at the rate of Re 1 5 0 and in default interest was to be calculated upon interest at the same rate. D. W. No. 10 deposes that the land sold under Exhibit IX was not worth more than the price for which it was sold, but this witness is evidently interested as he admits that he is related to the 39th defendant and was living in his house during his education period.

Now as to the effect of the sanction of the District Court given to the guardian to sell the minor's property, it has to be noted, in the first place, that the District Judge's order has not complied with section 31 (2) as it did not recite the necessity for the sale but simply ran thus:—"in the circumstances the sale of 9 acres in full satisfaction of the mortgage debt is sanctioned."

In my opinion the District Judge's sanction will not cure inherent defects that may exist in a sale by a guardian. The effect of the sanction accorded by Courts in such cases has been considered in Sikher Chund v. Dalputty Singh (1) and in Jugal Kishori Chowdhurani v. Anundi Lal Chowdhuri (2). The learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court held that sanction was prima facie evidence, that the transaction was a good one, but that the minor may at any future time show that it was fraudulent or improper. Where the evidence on both sides is before us, there is nothing to prevent the Court from coming to the conclusion that the sale was an improper one and not for the benefit of the minor, though the burden of proof in the first instance lies upon the person seeking to set aside the alienation. There is ample evidence for concluding that the sale in this case was not for purposes binding upon the minors. The plaintiffs are entitled to have it set aside in the suit and the Subordinate Judge's finding that it does not bind them must be upheld and the appeal dismissed with costs.

RAMESAM, J.—I agree with my learned brother and the Subordinate Judge with reference to the conclusion on the facts.

On the question of law argued by the learned Counsel for the appellants, I wish to add a few words. I think that the true rule as to the effect of the sanction of the District Court authorising an alienation by the guardian of the minor is stated in the decision in Sikher Chund v. Dulputty Singh (1). At page 370* Prinsep, J., says: "The fact that the District Judge, on the application and representation of a guardian under section 18, Act XL of 1858, may have sanctioned an alienation, cannot, in my opinion, affect the present cases, except in so far as it may rightly be considered as a general rule to throw the onus on the plaintiff to show that the alienations were improperly made contrary to the usual rule requiring the purchaser to establish the validity of the alienations, or that he acted with due care and caution after making such enquiry as an honest and prudent man would make." At page 381* Garth, C. J., says: "If the Court upon the materials and information brought before it by the guardian, makes an order for sale, I think that a purchaser who buys in good faith under that order, acquires a good title to the property sold, unless the minor or those claiming under him can show at some future time that the sale was fraudulent or improper." Again, at page 388* Garth, C. J., adds: "But then I also consider, that as the sales took place under the order of the Civil Court, the onus lies on the plaintiff to make out a prima facie case, such as she has alleged in her plaint, of fraud or illegality, and to show, that the debt or sum of money, which formed the consideration for the sale in each case was one for which the minor was not responsible." These observations are quoted with approval and followed in Jugul Krishori Chowdhurani v. Anunda Lal Chowdhuri (2).

It is contended before us that the decision in Akhil Chandra Saha v. Girish Chandra Saha (3) lays down a different rule, namely, that it is necessary to bring fraud home to the purchaser in order to impeach the transaction. I do not understand the case in Akhil Chandra Saha v. Girish Chandra Saha (3) as laying down a general rule that fraud should be made out. It may be observed that the decision in Akhil Chandra Saha v. Girish Chandra Saha (3) and the decision in Gangapershad Sahu v. Maharani Bibi (4) relate to sanction of the Court for the raising of loans by mortgage whereas the present case and the case in Sikher Chund v. Dulputty Singh (1) relate to sales. To give effect to the policy of the Legislature in section 31 of the Guardians and Wards Act I think it is enough to hold, as in Sikhar Chand v. Dulputty Singh (1), that the burden of proof is shifted to the plaintiff, and that it is not necessary to say that fraud has to be made out on the part of the purchaser to impeach the transaction.

I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch II, Art. 8—Suit for recovery of shop rent, whether triable by Small Cause Court.

The term "house rent," as used in Article 8 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, includes "shop rent". Therefore, a suit for the recovery of the rent of a shop is cognizable by a Small Cause Court.

Reference by the Judge, Small Cause Court, Amraoti, dated the 15th of November 1921, in connection with Civil Suit No. 1071 of 1921.

Mr. K. K. Gandhe, for the Plaintiff.

ORDER.—The plaintiff sued in the Small Cause Court for the rent of a shop situated in the town of Amraoti. The defendant contended that the suit being one for the rent of a shop and not of a house was excepted from the cognizance of Small Cause Courts. The question referred by the Small Cause Court is:

"Whether the term 'house rent,' as used in the Article 8 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, includes 'shop rent.'"

The defendant has not, in spite of notice, appeared in this Court to support his contention. It may be urged that, ordinarily,

"house" signifies a structure for dwelling in, and "shop" one for storing and selling goods in. In India, however, the same structure or part of a structure is, according to the habits of the majority of its people, not unsuited for use and is often used for both these purposes at the same or different times. In other words, what is ordinarily a shop is also a house. Again, the reasons for not excepting from the jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court a suit for rent of a house would apply equally to a suit for the rent of a shop. I can see no reason for distinguishing between shop rent and house rent in this connection. Probably it never occurred to the Indian Legislature that such a distinction was likely to be urged. In my opinion the suit is cognizable by the Small Cause Court.

Where a suit in the nature of a Small Cause Court suit was decreed ex parte by a Munsif exercising jurisdiction as a Small Cause Court Judge but an application to set aside the ex parte decree under Order IX, rule 13 of the Civil Procedure Code, was made to, and rejected by, his successor who was not invested with Small Cause Court powers:

Held, that as the decree, being that of a Small Cause Court, was final and not open to appeal, no appeal lay from the order passed by the Munsif under Order IX, rule 13 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Civil revision from an order of the District Judge, Mainpuri.

Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, for the Applicant.

Mr. Indu Bhushan Banerji, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order of the District Judge refusing to entertain an appeal on the ground that no appeal lay to him. It appears that the suit in this case was instituted in the Court of a Munsif who exercised Small Cause Court powers. He decided the suit and made an ex parte decree which was final. He was subsequently transferred, and his successor was an officer who was not invested with the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes An application was made to him to have the ex parte decree set aside under Order IX, rule 13. This application was refused by the Munsif upon grounds to which it is not necessary to refer. An appeal from the order of the Munsif was preferred to the District Judge and he held that no appeal lay. I think the view of the learned Judge was right. An appeal from an order passed under Order IX, rule 13 is maintainable under Order XLIII, rule 1 (d) in a case "open to appeal." This was not a case "open to appeal" inasmuch as the decree was passed by an officer exercising Small Cause Court jurisdiction, whose decree was final. Therefore, this was not a case open to appeal and, consequently, no appeal lay from the order passed by the present Munsif under Order IX, rule 13. This is not one of those cases in which execution proceedings taken in a Court the presiding officer of which had ceased to have Small Cause Court jurisdiction were held to be appealable. The application is dismissed with costs.

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Biswan, dated 13th September 1920.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Appellant.

Mr. Chhail Behari Lal, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs-mortgagees sued in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur for mortgagee's possession of the property in suit on foot of a mortgage bond executed on the 6th of August 1903 by one Anant Singh, father of two of the defendants and grandfather of the third defendant. The plaintiffs desired to enforce the condition in the mortgage entitling the mortgagees to take possession of the mortgaged property on non-payment of the mortgage amount within a certain time.

The defence was that the mortgage was not made for the payment of antecedent debt or for valid necessity so as to bind the defendants who were no parties to the mortgage. Anant Singh was dead prior to the institution of the suit.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that out of a consideration of Rs. 2,700, Rs. 1,603 was borrowed for the payment of antecedent debt, that there was no proof of valid necessity as regards the balance of the consideration and that the mortgage was not void because the major portion of the consideration was such as would be binding on the members of the joint family other than the mortgagor. On these grounds the suit was decreed and the defendants have appealed to this Court.

It is necessary, first, to examine the plea raised on behalf of the respondents in this Court that the father being dead the sons and grandson are under a pious duty to pay the balance of the consideration of Rs. 1,097 and that, therefore, the entire amount of the mortgage consideration was binding on the defendants. This plea is based on a pronouncement of a Bench of this Court in the case of Muhammad Baqar Ali Khan v. Hazari Lal (1) that "a transfer by a father, although originally invalid.....is given effect to against the sons on the death of the father provided that the transfer was to discharge or secure a debt not for immoral purposes, owing to the pious obligation of the sons to discharge such a debt of their father." This opinion of the Bench was not necessary for the decision of the case before it, but has been so often quoted in this Court that I first had the intention of referring the matter to a Bench. This opinion, however, has been definitely dissented from in an unreported judgment* of the Judicial Commissioner, Mr. Lindsay, in Second Appeal No. 134 of 1920 decided on the 13th of September 1920 [Ram Chhattar v. Ram Lal (2)] and a contrary pronouncement has been made by another Bench of this Court in Gur Sahai v. Girdhar Lal (3). So it is not necessary to refer the matter to a Bench. The Judges who decided the case reported in Muhammad Faqir Ali Khan v. Hazari Lal (1) appear to have derived the proposition set out above from the judgment of the Privy Council in Sahu Ramchandra's case. The Privy Council case, however, does not justify that proposition of law. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Sahu Ram Chandra quoted with approval the Full Bench ruling in the case of Chandra Deo Singh of the Allahabad High Court [Chandradeo Singh v. Mata Prasad (4)]. The Allahabad case was similar to the case before this Court and there, in the absence of proof of legal necessity, the Court refused to enforce as against the sons a mortgage which had been executed by the father though the father had died prior to the institution of the suit. This view of the law is further emphasized by the judgment delivered by Viscount Haldane in the Privy Council case of Jagi Das v. Ganga Ram (5). It was stated in that judgment that the mere circumstance of a pious obligation to pay a father's debt does not validate a mortgage which is invalid for want of legal necessity or of the necessity for the payment of antecedent debt. To quote the words of Mr. Lindsay in the unreported judgment referred to above: "I am unable to see on what principle a transfer by a father which, admittedly, is in its inception invalid can become a valid transfer merely by the accident of the father's death." On behalf of the respondents a Bench ruling in the case of Ram Saran v. Bhaya Mangal Singh (6) was quoted, but the reference to the principle of the pious duty of a son at page 92 of the report is very slight and one of the Judges who delivered the judgment in that case formed the Bench with another Judge in Gur Sahai's case (3), quoted above.

It is certain, therefore, that the defendants are not bound to pay the amount of Rs. 1,097 which was not borrowed by the mortgagor for any valid necessity or for the payment of an antecedent debt simply on the ground of a pious duty to pay the debt of a deceased father.

The next question is, whether the mortgage in suit is enforcible or not having regard to the finding of the lower Court regarding the validity or otherwise of portions of the consideration in suit which finding is not challenged in appeal. It was argued by the appellants' learned Counsel that the mortgage was at its inception void and, therefore, not enforcible. This argument would have been sound if the entire mortgage consideration or considerably a larger portion thereof had been proved to have been borrowed without legal necessity. I was referred to the ruling of a Bench of this Court reported as Gajodhar Bakhsh v. Gauri Shankar (7), in which case also, curiously enough, the mortgagor was the same person as the mortgagor in this case and the defendants the same, as in the present case. In that case, however, Anant Singh had no right whatever to mortgage the property and the mortgage was rightly held to be void and ineffectual from its very inception. The other case of a Single Judge referred to by the learned Counsel for the appellants was that of Bunyad Husain v. Mata Din Singh (8), but that case favours the contention of the mortgagees in this case. In that case legal necessity was found to have been proved with respect to a consideration of Rs. 3,782 out of Rs. 4,000 and the Court held that the alienation was effective. Where a large portion of the consideration amount is borrowed for legal necessity the transfer by the manager of a joint Hindu family cannot be said to be void. The question is one of equity and if the defendants had come forward to pay the sum of Rs. 1,603 with interest up to date it might have been found possible to order the plaintiffs to accept that amount and to dismiss the plaintiffs' suit In this case, however, though the suggestion was thrown out by the Court, no desire was expressed on behalf of the defendants to pay the valid portion of the consideration of the mortgage in suit. Under the circumstances, the only equitable course open to the Court is to direct that the plaintiffs may be put in possession in lieu of the principal amount of Rs. 1,603.

In the result, I dismiss the appeal but having regard to the invalid plea raised by the respondents' learned Counsel I direct that parties shall bear their own costs here.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 14, 120—Settlement entries, suit for amendment of—C. P. Land Revenue Act (XVIII of 1881), s. 83—Limitation.

A suit under section 83 of the C. P. Land Revenue Act of 1881 for amendment of Settlement entries is in the matter of limitation governed by Article 14 and not by Article 120 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act and must be filed within one year of the date on which the Record of Rights is duly made and attested and the assessment is offered to the proprietor. [p. 971, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against a decree in Civil Suit No. 3 of 1918, of the Court of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 6th April 1920.

Messrs. V. B. Pandit, B. B., and W. R. Puranik, for the Appellants.

Dr. H. S. Gour and Mr. M. V. Kinkhede, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendants repeat in their appeal the plea taken in the lower Court that the plaintiff's claim under section 83 of Act XVIII of 1881 (C. P. Land Revenue), for an amendment of the entries made at Settlement in respect of the proprietorship of Kharsoli Koparwadi and Rohna and the sir land of Rohna was barred by time. It will be convenient to settle this question first. At the Settlements of 1865 and 1893 the plaintiff's father was recorded as one of the proprietors of the village shares in dispute and the land he held was recorded as sir. At the recent Settlement orders were passed on the 18th and 19th of May 1914 by the Settlement Officer that the name of the plaintiff should be omitted from the khewat or list of proprietors of each village and that the land held by him in Rohna should no longer be recorded as sir, etc., but as his occupancy holding. This Settlement came into force on the 1st of July 1915. The date of the signature of the Malguzar on the Record of Rights for Rohna is 2nd January 1916 and on that for Kharsoli-Koparwadi is 10th January 1915, as we have ascertained by an examination of the Settlement Misl for each village. The signature of the Assistant Settlement Officer is undated in both cases. The Settlement was announced and the rent certificates were distributed on the 31st of December 1915. It may be mentioned that the learned Additional District Judge is apparently unaware of what the announcement of a Settlement is. He has taken it to be the communication to the plaintiff of the Settlement Officer's orders of the 18th and 19th May 1914. This suit was filed on the 15th of May 1916.

2. The claim for the amendment of the entries regarding the land which the Settlement Officer refused to record as sir is now admitted to be within time. Section 69 (4) of the Land Revenue Act lays down that such a suit must be filed within one year after the Settlement comes into force and this suit was filed a month and a half before the end of that year. It is in regard to the suit for the correction of the lists of proprietors that a question of limitation arises. The learned Additional District Judge has held that the period of limitation for a suit under section 83 of Act XVIII of 1881 is that prescribed by Article 120 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act, that is, six years from the time when the right to sue accrues and not the one year from the date of the Act or order of a Government Officer sought to be set aside which is allowed by Article 14. In this he followed the view taken by the Calcutta High Court in 1915 in Nabaghan Sadhai v. Raghu Nath Babu (1) a case from Sambalpur, which was filed in 1912. We are, with all respect, unable to accept that view. The reasoning of the learned Judges is as follows. Section 152 (b) of the Land Revenue Act deprives the Civil Court of jurisdiction over a number of matters in which are included "correction of entries or revisions of records under sections 120, 121 and 122" of the Act. Section 120 empowers the Deputy Commissioner alone to make any correction in an entry in a Record of Rights and limits the grounds on which such a correction can be made to four, of which one is that the entry has been declared to be erroneous by a decree in a suit brought under section 83. Though section 83 itself "speaks of a suit under it as a suit to have an entry cancelled or amended the Civil Court can only declare that the entry is erroneous and how it should be amended, but cannot execute its decree by bringing the Record of Rights into Court and altering it." The decree in such a suit is, therefore, "a decree which is merely declaratory of the plaintiff's right and a mere basis for further proceedings before some Revenue or other Officer." It is not "a decree which positively sets aside and nullifies something which an officer of Government has done."

3. It appears to us that the same reasoning would make a mortgage-decree no more than a declaratory decree if it ordered the sale of "any interest in land used for agricultural purposes or held on a tenure which was recognized at the time of the Settlement of such land, or of houses or of other immoveable property connected with such land or interest and used for agricultural purposes," because under section 70 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code the Civil Court cannot itself execute such a decree, which is "a mere basis for further proceedings before a Revenue Officer." Following the reasoning of the learned Judges still further, we would be forced to the conclusion that a suit for the sale of such land on mortgage was a suit for the declaration of a right only and was governed in the matter of limitation by Article 120. Section 83 itself authorises the filing of a suit to have a decision set aside or an entry cancelled or amended, and we can find no reason for treating a suit filed expressly under that authority as anything but what the section says it is. Least of all can we find any reason for doing so in the mere fact that the law prescribes a particular procedure for the execution of the decree, and does not leave it to be executed under the ordinary rules. We hold that, in the matter of limitation, a suit under section 83 of Act XVIII of 1881 (C. P. Land Revenue) is governed by Article 14 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act. This view derives some slight additional support from the fact that lays down that a suit of this nature is to be filed "within one year of the date on which the assessment is offered to the proprietors."

4. For the defendants it was strongly urged in this Court that the one year allowed for the institution of the suit must begin on the date of the Settlement Officer's order. This is based on a failure to notice that both section 83 of the Land Revenue Act and Article 14 of the Limitation Act speak of two kinds of suits though they use slightly different terms in describing them, those in the latter being naturally wider. One is a suit to set aside what is called a "decision of a Chief Settlement Officer" in the Land Revenue Act and an "order of an Officer of Government" in the Limitation Act. The other is called a suit to have an entry in the Record of Rights cancelled or amended by the Land Revenue Act and one to set aside an act of an Officer of Government by the Limitation Act. The distinction between an act and an order was not observed in the Calcutta case already discussed, where the learned Judges speak of a contention "that an entry in a Record of Rights is an 'act' or 'order' of a Government Officer." As the 'order' that the entry should be made and the 'act' of making it would naturally not be far apart in time, this matter may have been immaterial for the purposes of that case, if both order and act were within six years but not within one year of the institution of the suit, or the order and the act may have been contemporaneous. Here, however, they are not contemporaneous and the date of the act only is within one year of the institution of the suit. In terms and in essence, however, the suit is for the amendment of the entries, that is, for the setting aside of the act of the Settlement Officer in making them. The date of that act can only be taken to be that on which the Record of Rights was, in the words of section 82 of the Land Revenue Act, 'duly made and attested" by the last of the necessary signatures being affixed to it, because till the moment the record was merely a draft and these or any other entries could have been altered. The dates of the completion of the Record of Rights were not earlier than 2nd January 1916 for one village and 16th January 1916 for the other, as has already been stated, and the suit was filed on the 15th May of the same year. It is, therefore, well within time.

5. It was, however, pleaded by the defendants that the suit was barred by time in another way, which is that the plaintiff had been kept out of possession of the shares in both villages by them for more than twelve years. In the lower Court this plea has prevailed in regard to Kharsoli Koparwadi but not in regard to Rohna. We will take the case of Rohna first. The plaintiff and his father have all along been in possession of the land in Rohna which he claims is sir land. Up to 1914 at least he or his father was recorded as a co proprietor of the village share and the land was recorded as his sir. They were, however, apparently excluded from participation in every other form of proprietary profits. These other profits seem to amount to little or nothing, and the plaintiff or his father may have paid the amount of the assumed rent of the land they held every year to the defendants as a contribution to the revenue, though neither of these matters is quite clear. Now, from 1894 till 1914 the land was undoubtedly sir and the plaintiff and his father held it as such, and they conceived themselves and held themselves out to be co-sharers in the village. We are unable to understand how this can possibly be said to be anything but possession of a share in the village. The share may be measured by the extent of the sir land they held and may be incapable of expression in annas and pies for a fraction, but of that share they were undoubtedly in possession. The plaintiff's title to it is not disputed except on the ground of the adverse possession of the defendants for more than twelve years That plea having failed, the plaintiff is entitled to a decree declaring that he is a co-owner in Rohna and that the land he holds is his sir land.

6. For this village, however, the decree of the lower Court is clearly wrong in its definition of the share held by the plaintiff. It declares that he is the owner of a one fifth share in the half village that originally belonged to the family and also that all the plots with an area of 58·68 acres which he has been holding are his sir. All the sir land and also one-fifth of the other proprietary profits may be the extent of what he or his father held originally, but that state of things ended many years ago. For much more than twelve years before the institution of the suit the proprietary interest in the sir land is the only part of the whole proprietary interest that he has held. That must then be the extent of the share now belonging to him. The declaration in the decree of the lower Court in regard to Mouza Rohna must, therefore, be modified into a declaration that the present entries in the Record of Rights of that village are erroneous and that the correct entries are that the plaintiff is one of the owners of that village in that he is the sole proprietor of the four plots numbered 22, 39, 92 and 160 and measuring 58·63 acres and that these plots are sir land, and not occupancy land.

7. As to Kharsoli-Koparwadi, it is not denied that, since 1901 at the latest, the plaintiff has had no actual possession and has received no share whatever in the profits. His contention is that his name remained on the record as co-proprietor all the time and the defendants were managing the share on his behalf, under an arrangement by which he held some other part of what had once been the joint estate and appropriated the profits, so that there was never any necessity for the actual passing of any money in the payment of profits. He has not explained what other part of property was held in this way except by suggestions put forward by the mouth of his witnesses only, that it was Rohna. But as the learned Additional District Judge points out, this suggestion "falls to the ground the moment one considers that the plaintiff's father never made collections from the tenants of Rohna." It is beyond all possibility of doubt that the defendants have all along been holding the share in Kharsoli Koparwadi adversely to the plaintiff in very strenuous denial of his title. In these circumstances, the mere fact that the plaintiff's name remained on the record is of no help to him. In regard to this village the decree of the lower Court appears to us to be quite correct.

8. In the defendants' appeal, it is contended that the decree of the lower Court in regard to costs is not in accordance with the judgment, which orders "that the plaintiff shall get costs from the defendants in proportion to his success and that the plaintiff shall pay costs to the defendants in proportion to his failure

The proportions are certainly not correctly worked out. The plaintiff succeeded in respect of Rs. 20,000 and failed in respect of Rs. 3,000. The plaintiff has, therefore, to pay Rs 138, not Rs. 159 8 0, to the defendants, and the defendants have to pay Rs. 326 8 0 to the plaintiff, and the decree must be corrected accordingly.

9. In this Court both parties have succeeded to a very slight extent and the nearest possible approximation to what is fair in the matter of costs appears to be that each side pay its own in both appeals. The decree of the lower Court will, therefore, be modified as set out in paragraphs 6 and 8 of this judgment, and there will be no order for costs in either appeal.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 92, 93, 94—Contract of sale in favour of one named person and others—"Others", who are—Evidence, admissibility of.

Where a vendor agrees to sell land to several named persons and in drawing up the agreement of sale the name of one person is mentioned and, without naming the rest, the word "others" is used, evidence can be let in in a suit for specific performance of the contract as to the persons in whose favour the conveyance is to be executed.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, Anantapur, in Appeal Suit No. 18 of 1920, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Penukonda, in Original Suit No. 1011 of 1917.

Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. Narayanamurthi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We are unable to accept the finding of the District Judge that the first plaintiff is the only person interested in the contract. The agreement to sell, Exhibit A, expressly states that the contract is in favour of the first plaintiff and others. The case for the first plaintiff is that the others referred to in the document are the second and third plaintiffs. The case for the contesting defendant is that by others were intended the other plaintiffs, the sixth defendant and 20 other villagers. The only evidence is that of first plaintiff and first defendant. The first plaintiff says that the others means second and third plaintiffs, and the first defendant in his evidence says that 'others' means second and third plaintiffs, sixth defendant and 20 others. The sixth defendant in his written statement also says so. Having regard to the terms of the document, the written statement and the evidence in this case, we find it difficult to see how the Court can find that the first plaintiff was solely interested in the contract or how a decree can be passed in favour of the first plaintiff alone.

It is argued by the appellant's Vakil that evidence is not admissible to show who are meant by the term "others" and that the contract is, therefore, unenforcible. Where a vendor agrees to sell land to several named persons and in drawing up agreement of sale the name of one person is mentioned and, without naming the rest, the the word "others" is used, we can find nothing in the Evidence Act to prevent evidence from being let in as to the persons in whose favour the conveyance is to be executed. We do not think that any of the provisions of section 91 or 92 are contravened nor does the case fall within sections 93 to 97 of the Evidence Act.

As there is no dispute that the three plaintiffs are interested, and as the only point in issue between parties is whether the sixth defendant and 20 others are also interested, the lower Court was wrong in passing a decree in favour of the first plaintiff alone.

We reverse the decree and remand the appeal for disposal in the light of the above observations. Costs will abide the result. The Court-fee will be refunded.

Hindu Law - Will, construction of—Widow, rights of—Absolute owner—"Malik"—Trust—Uncertainty of subject-matter.

If words are used in a Will executed by a Hindu husband in favour of his wife conferring absolute ownership upon the wife, the wife enjoys the rights of ownership without their being conferred by express and additional terms unless the circumstances or the context are sufficient to show that such absolute ownership was not intended [p. 76, col. 1]

The word "malik" is not a "term of art" and does not necessarily define the quality of the estate taken but the ownership of whatever that estate may be. [p 976, col. 1]

A Hindu, governed by Mayukha Law, executed a Will by which he constituted his wife as owner (malik) and directed that whatever property remains after her death, the wife shall leave the said property to his two daughters in such manner as she may like:

Held, that the use of the word "malik" taken with the context of the Will indicated a clear intention to pass an absolute estate. [p 976, col 2; p. 977, col. 1.]

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court at Bombay, affirming a decree of the same Court in its Original Civil Jurisdiction.

FACTS.—Nathu Moolji, a Guzerati Hindu, who died on the 8th December 1894, left a Will, the material terms of which appear from the judgment of the Judicial Committee. The appeal relates to the construction of the terms of the said Will.

Nathu Moolji left a widow and two daughters, Jamnabai and Diwali. Diwali died in 1906 leaving the appellant (her (husband) as her heir. The widow died in 1911 and the other daughter Jamnabai died sometime afterwards. The respondents claim the properties as heirs of Jamnabai.

The suit was instituted by the appellant as heir of Diwali who died in 1906.

The Trial Judge (Macleod, J.,) dismissed the suit. On appeal, Scot, C. J., and Heaton, J. disagreed upon the construction of the Will.

Scott, C. J., was of opinion that the widow took only a life estate and that there was a trust in remainder in favour of the daughters as tenants-in-common in equal shares. Heaton, J., held that no obligation was imposed on the widow to make any disposition in favour of the daughters.

The question upon which they disagreed was referred under section 98, sub-section (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure, and was heard by Bachelor and Shah, JJ., who agreed with Heaton, J., and dismissed the appeal.

An appeal to the Judicial Committee was preferred but the only question argued before the Committee then was with regard to the irregularity in procedure. The Judicial Committee allowed the appeal [Bhaidas Shivdas v. Bai Gulab (1)] holding that the procedure followed by the High Court was wrong and expressed their readiness to hear the appeal on its merits. The appeal was subsequently restored to the list by consent and was heard upon its merits.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Parikh, for the Appellant.—On a proper construction of the Will, the widow took only a widow's estate with a special obligation to appoint between the two daughters. The use of the word "Malik" is not conclusive as to the absolute estate taken by the widow as the subsequent clauses 18 and 23 show a contrary intention.

Powers of appointment in Hindu Wills are valid.

Bai Motivahu v. Bai Manubai (2).

Section 79 of the Indian Succession Act was not made applicable to Hindu Wills by Act XXI of 1870, section 2, because it was thought at the time that a power of appointment could not be given under a Hindu Will. But the rule embodied in section 79 is, however, a rule of construction and should receive effect as a rule of justice, equity and good conscience. The Appellate Court relied upon a translation of the words used in the Will which is different from the official translation accepted by the parties. If two constructions are possible, effect shall be given to the one which excludes an intestacy.

Section 6 of the Indian Trusts Act (II of 1882) was extended to the Bombay Presidency in 1891.

Sir George Lowndes, K. C., and Mr. Raikes, for the Respondents.—The word "Malik" imports full proprietary rights, unless there is something in the context to qualify it.

Surajmani v. Babi Nath Ojha (3). There is no trust created in favour of the daughters. The words relied upon are insufficient to create a trust. They are merely indicatory that the widow may transmit property to the daughters.

The Appellate Court composed of Judges knowing the language in which the Will was written, was entitled to give effect to the true translation of the words in the Will.

Ramanudan Chettiar v. Vava Levvai Marakayar (4).

The subject matter of the alleged trust was too uncertain for a trust to arise.

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—This is an appeal against a decree dated the 23rd March 1917 of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay (Appellate Civil Jurisdiction), affirming a decree, dated the 8th September 1916, of the High Court in its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The question raised for determination arises on the construction of the Will, dated the 6th August 1894, of one Nathoo Moolji who died on the 8th December 1894.

The appellant is the husband of one of the two daughters of the testator, who predeceased her mother, the testator's widow. The respondents claim under the other daughter who survived her mother

At the date of the Will there were living the testator's widow, his two daughters, and the widow of a predeceased son. The two daughters were named Jamnabai and Diwali. Diwali died on the 13th May 1906 and the testator's widow on the 15th August 1911.

In these circumstances, the appellant claims as the husband of Diwali that, according to the true construction of the Will, the two daughters took a vested interest in the testator's residuary estate, which was not divested by reason of the death of one of the daughters before the death of the widow. The history of the suit has been fully dealt with by their Lordships when this appeal was formerly before them, and need not be repeated.

The Will was made in the Gujarati language, and in the translation is divided into clauses. By clause 2 the testator appoints his wife as his sole executrix. In the next clause, after stating that as he has no son he appoints his wife to be his heir; and the clause continues in these words:—

"And I constitute her the owner. And as to whatever property there may remain after her death my wife shall leave the said property to my two daughters in such manner as she may like (either) by making a 'Will' or by making (some) other instrument. Of my two daughters one named Bai Jamnabai was married to Shah Haridas Hemchand, but as he subsequently died she has now become a widow. To her and to (my) other daughter Bai Diwali who has been married to Shah Bhaidas Shivdas (i. e.) to both of them my wife shall give (my) property in such manner as (she) may like."

By later clauses of the Will the testator referred to powers that he desired his wife to enjoy; for example, by clause 6 he expressly states that he gives his wife authority to do what she thinks right with the profits and the ready moneys of a shop where he carried on business, and further to continue in partnership with the partners if she so desired. By clause 18 he provides that, after there have been defrayed out of the rents of certain specific immoveable property, the expenses in connection with a religious object, for which he had made provision, the wife should apply the surplus for her maintenance and use and for the maintenance and use of her daughters if they were living with her, and if the surplus were insufficient she should deal with the moveable and immoveable properties in such manner as she thought fit. By clause 20, again, he gave express power to his wife to mortgage, lease sell and use the properties. Finally, by clause 23 he provided that after the death of his wife his daughters should be named executrixes, and he gave them authority to deal with or manage the whole of his property and effects. There is no dispute that the word that was used in clause 3 as the original word of gift was the word "Malik" which could be appropriately used to constitute the wife absolute owner. It is not that the word is a "term of art," it does not necessarily define the quality of the estate taken but the ownership of whatever that estate may be; and in the context of the present Will their Lordships think the estate was absolute. At the time when the Will was executed it may well have been that whoever drew the Will was aware that at that time words of absolute gift in favour of a Hindu widow might not be supposed capable of conferring upon her a power of alienation, for, in the case of Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Oha (3), which ultimately came before this Board, we find that the High Court had ruled :—

"that under the Hindu Law, as interpreted up to the present in the case of immoveable property given or devised by a husband to his wife, the wife has no power to alienate, unless the power of alienation is conferred upon her in express terms."

The decision in Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Oha (3) showed that that provision was no longer sound and that if words were used conferring absolute ownership upon the wife, the wife enjoyed the rights of ownership without their being conferred by express and additional terms, unless the circumstances or the context were sufficient to show that such absolute ownership was not intended. If clause 3 stood by itself it would, their Lordships think, be difficult to dispute that whatever the testator desired with regard to the disposition of his property after the death of his wife he had not expressed his wishes in such a manner that they bound the property. The words under which the appellant claims are words which only attach to whatever property there may remain after the death of the wife. Without for the moment considering whether the desire expressed by the testator is expressed in a form that makes her disposition of it mandatory or no, it is sufficient to say that if that clause stood alone the principle stated in the case of Horwood v. West (5), would be applicable to this Will as it would to a Will in England. The Vice Chancellor says at page 389*:—

"It is essential to the execution of a trust that the subject should be certain; and if this testator intended that his wife should, at her pleasure, during her life, dispose of the property which he left to her and that his recommendation should extend only to what, if anything happened to remain of his property at her death undisposed of by her, then there is no trust to be administered by this Court."

But the appellant points out with considerable force that clause 3 does not stand by itself; but that the clauses referred to, and most notably clauses 18 and 23, are in their terms inconsistent with the view that the provisions of clause 3 constituted the wife the absolute owner. Their Lordships are very far from saying that there is not force in this argument; but so far as clause 18 is concerned, it should be remembered that even then there is a provision that the surplus, after the property has been used for maintenance in the manner suggested, is to remain with the wife for her maintenance and use, and power is given to her to deal with the immoveable or moveable property as she may think fit. Again, with regard to clause 23, the appointment of the daughters as executrixes of the property, if in fact there had been a gift to them after the widow's death would be quite unnecessary. The only purpose for creating them executrixes would on either hypothesis be to see that the religious purpose to which part of the property had been devoted and a certain beneficial trust given to the widow of the son should be carried out. If and so far as they were absolute owners it had little value.

Their Lordships, therefore, think that these subsequent clauses in the Will are not sufficient to displace the language of clause 3, fortified by the powers given in clause 20, and by that language there is no trust created in favour of the two daughters of the testator. In forming this conclusion their Lordships have not considered the serious difficulty that is placed in the way of the appellant by the judgments of the Court from which this appeal has proceeded. In the Court of Appeal one at least of the Judges was thoroughly acquainted with the language in which this Will is drawn, and he took the view that the actual words used in clause 3 suggesting how the property should be left after the death of the testator's widow were in themselves inadequate to do anything more than to express a wish and did not create an obligation. Their Lordships have not dealt with that part of the case, because in their opinion the matter is better decided upon the principle to which reference has already been made, viz., even assuming it was intended to create a trust and the words were sufficient for that purpose the subject-matter on which the trust is to operate is by the terms of this Will too uncertain to enable the Court to give it administration.

For these reasons, their Lordships are of opinion that this appeal must fail and ought to be dismissed with costs; the costs incurred in the Court below from the 13th March 1917, and of the appeal on the preliminary point that was argued before this hearing on the merits was reached, which were reserved, in their Lordships' opinion should be costs in the appeal; and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff. He alleges that Musammat Mulukrani Kuer was the absolute owner of the properties specified in the plaint and that he obtained an istamrari mukarari patta from Musammat Mulukrani Kuer on the 7th of August 1896. A dispute having arisen between himself and the reversioners of Babu Har Pragas Narayan Singh, the husband of Musammat Mulukrani Kuer, the properties were attached by the order of the Magistrate and this suit was brought for a declaration of the plaintiff's title to, and for recovery of, possession of the properties together with the surplus amount of profits in the hands of the Receiver. There were six parties who were defendants to the suit but we are concerned now only with the third party who are two minors under the protection of the Court of Wards. Their defence was that Musammat Mulukrani Kuer had only a limited interest in the properties for the term of her life and that, consequently, the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed. The Subordinate Judge held that Musammat Mulukrani Kuer had an absolute right to the property and consequently gave a decree to the plaintiff. This decision was reversed on appeal and the question now is as to the nature of the estate taken by Musammat Mulukrani Kuer under a deed of gift executed in her favour by her husband on the 23rd June 1859.

The contention on behalf of the appellant is that the preamble to the deed refers to the whole collection of rights to their uttermost limit in these properties, and that by the first clause the properties are granted to the grantor's wife "as malik" and that, consequently, she became full owner, her interest being limited only so far as it is specifically limited in the succeeding clauses. The second clause deals with the power of alienation and there is no restriction therein on the granting of a mokarari lease. Consequently, Musammat Mulukrani Kuer had power to grant a mokarari lease and the lease granted by her is valid.

Reference was made to the decisions in Kollany Koer v. Luchmee Pershad (1), Suramani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (2), Bhaidas Shivdas v. Bai Gulab (3) and the unreported decision of the Privy Council in Musammat Sasiman Chowdhurain v. Shib Narayan Chowdhury. It was argued that the effect of these cases is to show, as observed in the last mentioned case, that the term 'malik,' when used in a Will or other document as descriptive of the position which a devisee or donee is intended to hold, has been held apt to describe an owner possessed of full proprietary rights, including a full right of alienation, unless there is something in the context or in the surrounding circumstances to indicate that such full proprietary rights were not intended to be conferred;" and, further, that the fact that the donee is the wife or widow of a Hindu is not in itself a circumstance qualifying the meaning of the word "malik".

Now, as was pointed out in the case of Musammat Sasiman Chowdhurain v. Shib Narayan Chowdhury, it is always dangerous to construe the words of one Will by the construction of more or less similar words in a different Will which was adopted by a Court in another case. The case upon which the learned Counsel for the appellant most strongly relies is Bhaidas Shivdas v Bai Gulab (3), but the terms of the Will in that case were materially different from those under consideration now. The rule of construction is given in Shib Lakshan v. Srimati Tarangini Dasi (4) where it was laid down that the Court must, in construing a Will, look to all the clauses of the Will and give effect to all the clauses, ignoring none as redundant or contradictory—see also Kandarpa Nath Ghose v. Jogendra Nath Bose (5). This deed, therefore, cannot be construed by reference only to the preamble and the first two clauses, but must be read as a whole. The second clause lays down the limits within which the donee can alienate the property; any alienation made during the lifetime of the donor is to be by his permission. After his death she can transfer up to a limit of 50 bighas for charitable purposes; she can also transfer by sale or gift to any son of the donor and the donee or the son of that son or any other son or daughter of the donor or any male descendant of his elder brother, but except to these persons she is to have no power to sell, or make a gift of, or mortgage, more than 50 bighas. The third clause gives the donee power to execute a Will in favour of any of the aforesaid persons. The fourth clause deals with the property, undisposed of at the donee's death by any such Will and in that case it is declared that her son will get the property, or his male descendants, and if there is no son of the donee or male descendant of such son then in existence, then any other son of the donor or his son and in default of such persons, the donor's elder brother or his son will get the property, but no daughter of the donee or any of her paternal or maternal relations. The fifth clause provides for any unmarried daughter or son's daughter of the donee, and the last clause declares that if the donee dies before the donor, the properties undisposed of by the donee will revert to him.

Now, as was pointed out in the case of Bhaidas Shivdas v. Bai Gulab (3), the word "malik" is not a term of art, that is to say, it does not necessarily define the quality of the estate taken but the ownership of whatever that estate may be. Absolute ownership imports at least the right to exclusive and free enjoyment of the property and free power of disposition. It is impossible to hold, on the terms of this deed, that an absolute estate was granted to Musammat Mulukrani Kuer; the limitations are inconsistent with free and full ownership. Reading the deed as a whole, it seems to me clear that the intention of the donor was to provide for the donee and also for the ultimate devolution of his property. The grant in effect is the grant of an ordinary Hindu woman's estate with powers to sell, or to appoint by deed or Will, to certain specified persons, and if these powers are not exercised by the donee they are exercised by the donor by this deed in favour of those persons. It follows that the absence of any clause restraining the donee from granting a mokarrari lease does not lead to the conclusion that she is empowered to grant it; her powers must be gathered from the total effect of the conveyance and from the nature of the estate thereby granted. The argument of the appellant involves isolating a portion of the deed from the rest and then inferring that, because this power is not expressly taken away, it is granted. The argument infringes the rule of construction above referred to. In my opinion, therefore, this appeal must fail and be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The lower Appellate Court has so far decided the case against the plaintiff-appellant, because it answered in the affirmative the question whether the person holding under a lease granted before a suit is bound by the decision against his lessor in that suit, although he is not a party to it. We cannot follow the lower Appellate Court in this; and in fact the only support adduced for its opinion is the quotation from an American author in Seshappaya v. Venkatramana Upadya (1). But the portion of that quotation at present material was not so for the purpose of the issue in that case and the learned Judges, in fact, after observing that it was inconsistent with the principle of English, Irish and Indian cases, declined to decide as to its correctness. On the other hand, although no case of tenancy has been shown to us, the principle applied to other cases of transfer in Sita Ram v. Amir Begum (2), Joy Chandra Banerjee v. Sreenath Chatterjee (3), Abdul Ali v. Mukhan Abdul Hussein (4) and Ramchandra Dhondo Kulkarni v. Malopa Narsapa (5) is in accordance with plaintiff's contention. Adopting that principle, we must set aside the lower Appellate Court's decree and remand the appeal to it for further hearing on its merits. Costs to date here and in the lower Appellate Court will be provided for in the decree to be passed. Stamp value will be refunded on application.

RICHEY, J.—I will only add that an illustration of the principle of privity by subordination Bigelow gives is the Common Law case of feoffor and feoffee. This, he says, is Coke's illustration. Then he mentions the case of landlord and tenant, for which no authority is cited. On the other hand, Black on Judgments, Volume II, section 549, states the law in the other way, citing Satterlee v. Bless (6), so that, even in America, it is doubtful whether the law as to landlord and tenant is as stated by Mr. Bigelow. All other authority is against it. I agree in the order of my learned brother, Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 iv (c)—Suit for declaration—Consequential relief—Court-fee payable.

In order to determine the amount of Court-fee payable in a suit for a declaration that a particular property is or is not liable to a mortgage or charge it is the substance of the prayer which must be looked to and not merely the form of plaint, and the plaint or memorandum of appeal must be stamped ad valorem according to the value of the charge with which the plaintiff or the appellant seeks to burden the property or of which he seeks to relieve it. [p. 681, col. 2.]

A suit praying that certain foreclosure decrees are void and ineffectual against the rights of the plaintiff and that the mortgage still subsists and is redeemable, is one involving consequential relief and an ad valorem Court-fee is payable under section 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act. [p. 683, col. 2.]

SRIPAL SINGH v. JAGDISH NARAYAN SINGH.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 24th February 1921.

Messrs Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava and Rajeshwari Prasad for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. N Chak and Wasi Hasan, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

Mr. Ali Mohammad, holding brief of Mr. Gokaran Nath Misra, for Respondents Nos. 7 to 11.

JUDGMENT.—This case raises a question of Court fees which must be decided before the appeal can be heard on the merits. The question is, whether the suit is "to obtain a declaratory decree or order where consequential relief is prayed" and liable to an ad valorem Court-fee under section 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act, or whether it is a purely declaratory suit sufficiently stamped with a Court fee of Rs. 10 under Article 17 (iii) of the Second Schedule to that Act. The alternative suggestion of the appellant that the suit is one the value of which it is not possible to estimate in money under Article 17 (vi) of the same Schedule, though a Calcutta case is cited in support of it, need not be seriously considered. The value of the relief is clearly capable of being estimated. The plaintiff valued it for purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 5,967 11 0, the amount of the foreclosure decree which has been obtained against him, and under section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act the valuation for Court fees in the case of a suit falling under section 7 (iv) (c) is the same as the valuation for jurisdiction. This section occurs in Part II of the Act, which extends to the whole of British India. This section also disposes of the suggestion made by the appellant that, even if an ad valorem fee is payable, he is at liberty to put on it a different valuation for Court fees from that which he has placed on it for purposes of jurisdiction.

A final foreclosure decree in respect of the property in suit has been passed against the plaintiff-appellant. The preliminary decree which was afterwards made final was obtained on the basis of a compromise sanctioned by the Court. The appellant seeks to set aside both the preliminary and the final decrees on two grounds; first, that they were obtained by fraud, and, secondly, that he was a minor and was not properly represented in the foreclosure suit. (He was represented but he alleges that the guardian was not regularly appointed).

The relief asked for is in these terms: "That a declaratory decree be passed to the effect that the foreclosure decrees, dated 12th October 1911 and 2nd May 1912, are void and ineffectual against the rights of the plaintiff and the plaintiff is not bound by them. The mortgage does still subsist and the plaintiff is still entitled to redeem the mortgage of 15th October 1900."

It was stated at the hearing before me on behalf of both sides that the parties were agreed that if this suit is successful the Court will be asked to restore the foreclosure suit and dispose of it on the merits. This position was accepted by the learned Subordinate Judge who says in an order of 10th September 1920 on the record: "If the decree is proved to have been obtained by exercise of fraud or collusion and the suit is decreed, it appears to me that the first suit will be revived and would stand in the condition in which it was filed on the date of institution."

The suit has been dismissed by the Court below so that the relief asked for in appeal is the same as that asked for in the trial Court.

The contention of the appellant's learned Advocate that the Court cannot look beyond the form of the plaint, and that, unless consequential relief is asked for in express terms, the suit is purely declaratory, is negatived by a long series of cases in which declarations have been asked for that a particular property was or was not liable to a mortgage or charge. In such cases the Courts have consistently held that it is the substance of the prayer which must be looked to, and that the plaint or memorandum of appeal must be stamped ad valorem according to the value of the charge with which the appellant seeks to burden the property or of which he seeks to relieve it. As instances of such suits I may refer to Khichera v. Kharag Singh (1), Sukhnandan v. Lachhman Prasad (2), Jodhan Pershad Singh v. Nankku Pershad Singh (3), Premsukh Das v. Shah Gopi Saran (4), Moti

Begam v. Har Prasad (5), Sheoraja v. Debi Din (6).

In this connection I may usefully refer to the remarks of Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Deokali Koer v. Kedar Nath (7). That case was very similar to the one now before me. The appellant sued for a declaration that a registered mortgage-deed and a decree obtained thereon had been obtained by fraud and were ineffectual, inoperative and invalid and that the mortgaged property could not be sold under that decree. Notwithstanding that the form of the suit was declaratory the Court held that the prayer in the plaint really involved consequential relief, and Sir Lawrence Jenkins in delivering the leading judgment says: "If the Courts were astute—as I think they should be—to see that the plaints presented conformed to the terms of section 42, the difficulties that are to be found in this class of cases, would no longer arise."

In Arunachalam Chetty v. Rangasawmy Pillai (8) the question was referred to a Full Bench.

"Whether a suit for declaration that an instrument of mortgage or sale executed by the plaintiff or a decree that has been passed against the plaintiff for a debt is not binding on him, is a declaratory suit only;" and the Full Bench unanimously answered the question by saying that a suit of the nature indicated which merely asks for a declaration is nonetheless a suit for a declaratory decree with consequential relief within the meaning of section 7 (iv) (c). The appellant points out that in the actual case which gave rise to the reference the plaintiff asked for a declaration that a decree for sale on the basis of a mortgage was not binding on him and for an injunction restraining the decree-holder from executing that decree, and, therefore, the remarks regarding a purely declaratory suit were obiter, but a judgment which was delivered by the Full Bench for the purpose of finally setting at rest a question which had given rise to difference of opinion among the Judges ought not to be lightly brushed aside on this ground. The case emphasises the principle which has been laid down in many other cases, that it is the real nature of the relief which will result on a suit being decreed which determines the Court-fee payable. If a consequential relief is involved the plaintiff cannot evade payment of Court fees merely by casting his suit into a declaratory form. Here the result would be precisely the same whether an injunction were asked for or not. Even if no injunction were asked for, no Court would proceed to execute a decree which had been declared to be a nullity in a regular suit between the parties. The decisions in Arunachalam Chetty v. Rangasawmy Pillai (8) and Deokali Koer v. Kedar Nath (7) have superseded the earlier decisions of the same Courts on which the appellant seeks to rely.

Finally, it has been argued that even in substance no consequential relief is involved. It is urged that the defendants were in possession of the property as mortgagees before the foreclosure decree was passed and they will remain in possession if the present suit is successful. This argument is specious but unsound. In the ordinary case of a declaratory suit asking for a declaration that the plaintiff is owner and in possession of the disputed property, the position is that the plaintiff is proprietor at the time when the suit is brought. Something has happened to cast a cloud on his title and he seeks to have that title re-affirmed. Here the position is entirely different. So long as the foreclosure decree stands good, the plaintiff is not only not the owner but has no right whatever left in the property. The ownership rests in the decree-holders and the decree operates as res judicata between the parties. If this suit is successful the decree-holders will lose their title to the property and will be relegated to the position of mortgagees seeking to enforce their mortgage by a suit in the Courts. The preliminary and final decree will be wiped out and proceedings which have finally terminated will be restored to the file and decided afresh. If the decree which the plaintiff seeks to set aside had merely declared a charge on the property, the plaintiff would unquestionably have had to pay an ad valorem fee. Can he be in any better position when that decree goes further and extinguishes his proprietary right altogether ? I hold, therefore, that the suit is one involving consequential relief and that an ad valorem fee is payable under section 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act.

It is needless to enter into any question of the value of the relief given by the plaintiff. He has himself valued it. In cases falling under section 7 (iv) it is for the plaintiff himself to state the value of the relief in the plaint or memorandum of appeal. In this case he has valued it at Rs. 5,967-11 0, the amount of the foreclosure decree, and, as has been already pointed out, in suits of this nature, the value for jurisdiction and the value for Court-fees are the same. The appellant must, therefore, pay the sum of Rs. 315 on this valuation both in this Court and in the Court below, failing which the appeal will be dismissed. I allow thirty days' time for the deficiency to be made good. The case will be put up on September 5th for orders.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 89—Application to set aside sale—Deposit by one of several judgment-debtors, whether enures for benefit of co-judgment-debtors.

Where one of several judgment-debtors makes a deposit in Court of the amount stated in a sale proclamation and the 5 per cent. of the purchase-money, quite independently and not conjointly with the other judgment-debtors, it is not open to a co-judgment-debtor to take advantage of such deposit in support of an application under Order XXI, rule 89 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Petition under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying to revise an order of the District Court, Madura, in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 52 of 1919, preferred against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Madura, in Execution Appeal No. 202 of 1919.

Messrs. K. S. Jayarama Aiyar, and P R. Narayana Aiyar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. V. Sesha Aiyangar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Following the ruling in Karunkara Menon v. Krishna Menan (1), which takes a strict view of Order XXI, rule 89 and holds that the terms of the rule should be "very strictly conformed to," I think this petition must be allowed. The first defendant did not deposit in Court the amount stated in the proclamation and the 5 per cent. himself. He is not entitled to take advantage of any deposit, made by his co-judgment-debtor or the defendant, which was not made conjointly with him but quite independently of him. Such a deposit in Court cannot be treated as money received by the decree-holder within the meaning of the rule so as to enable the respondent to take advantage of it; See Trimbak Narayan v. Ramchandra Narsingrao (2), followed in Karunakara Menon v. Krishna Menon (1), cited above.

In these circumstances, I must hold that the provisions of rule 89 have not been complied with by the respondent and the order setting aside the sale of Item No. 1 must be reversed. The order of the District Judge is set aside and that of the Subordinate Judge is restored with costs here and in the Courts below.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 6th May 1921.

Mr. Parbhu Dayal Rastogi, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the order of the learned Subordinate Judge in a partition case directing Commissioners who had been appointed in the case to ascertain the value of certain property and to take possession of it. The appeal was filed as an appeal from a preliminary decree, but no copy of the decree was filed with it as it was said that no decree had been prepared. On enquiry from the learned Subordinate Judge it appears that a preliminary decree had previously been passed in the case and that this was merely an interlocutory order. It has been held, both by the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts, that there can be only one preliminary decree in a suit. [Vide Kamini Debi v. Promotho Nath Mookerjee (1) and Bharatendu v. Yaqub Husain (2).] With these rulings we are in agreement. We, therefore, hold that this appeal is not maintainable, but should this suit result in a final decree unfavourable to the appellant, it will be open to him to attack the present order in appeal from the final decree.

If any duly qualified citizen, or burgher, or person entitled to be upon the electoral roll of any constituency is omitted from such roll so as to be deprived of his right to vote, and so as to give the Returning Officer an adequate ground for refusing him the right to vote on election day when the matter has to be decided summarily, and that refusal or omission from the roll, as the case may be turns out on investigation to be wrongful he has suffered a legal wrong: he has been deprived of a right recognised by law and he has against the person so depriving him a remedy by "an action on the case" for nominal damages for the right that he has lost, which may, at the discretion of the Court, be punitive or exemplary if the conduct is the result of some malicious and wicked intention and also for any pecuniary expenses to which he may have been reasonably put as a result of the wrong done, for example efforts to re-place his name on the roll. [p. 985, cols. 1 & 2]

A suit for damages for wrong done to the plaintiff by wrongful omission to record his name correctly on the candidate's list of the Municipal Electoral Roll is rightly brought against the Municipal Board itself and individual members including the Executive Officer, and if in such a case liability is eventually established for damages, that liability, in order to be placed upon the right shoulders, must be decided according to the ordinary general principles of principal and agent. No individual member of the Board can be made liable in his own pocket, separately and independently of the Board for an act in which he had no part or lot himself and which he did not in any way authorise. On the other hand, any individual member of the Board who either expressly or indirectly encouraged, incited, directed or approved of, in other words, aided and abetted the attempt to deprive the plaintiff of his right to be on the candidates' list would be liable in his own pocket, independently altogether of the question whether or not the Municipal Board would be liable as well. The Municipal Board as principal would only be liable for their corporate act, i.e., an act done by themselves by way of resolution, or by a committee of authority appointed by them, or by one of their servants in the ordinary course of business [p. 986, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

WALSH, J.—This is an appeal from an order of remand which was clearly rightly made, although we think made on wrong grounds. The matter raises a question of such importance, possibly to the plaintiff himself but certainly to the general public, that it is desirable to make the law clear. It has not yet been tried and we refrain from expressing any opinion about the merits. We would merely say this by way of preface, that, in our opinion, the law in India upon the questions raised is the same as the law in England, and the Common Law of England provides that if any duly qualified citizen, or burgher, or person entitled to be upon the electoral roll of any constituency is omitted from such roll so as to be deprived of his right to vote, and so as to give the Returning Officer an adequate ground for refusing him the right to vote on election day when the matter has to be decided summarily, and that refusal or omission from the roll, as the case may be, turns out on investigation to be wrongful, he has suffered a legal wrong; he has been deprived of a right recognised by law and he has against the person so depriving him a remedy by what has always been called "an action on the case" for nominal damages for the right that he has lost, which may at the discretion of the Court be punitive or exemplary if the conduct is the result of some malicious and wicked intention; and also for any pecuniary expenses to which he may have been reasonably put as a result of the wrong done, for example, efforts to replace his name on the roll. It has been suggested by the Municipal Board before us that the plaintiff either did not seriously assert, or abandoned, this precise form of claim when he came to Court. It is certainly contained in his plaint. It does appear to be absent from the judgments of the two Courts as a substantive matter in dispute, and it is not the ground on which the lower Appellate Court has remanded the suit. But we are not satisfied that the plaintiff ever intended to abandon it, and it is clearly a matter which ought to be disposed of either by a correct judicial decision or by the consent of the parties. All that we know about the plaintiff's attitude in the matter is that he asked for something very much more—one relief which he had already got, and another, namely, a declaration that the constitution of the Municipal Board was altogether invalid, which he was never likely to get,—and that he announced his intention of conferring such damages as he could recover upon some charitable institution.

In order that our view must be properly appreciated the allegation of the plaintiff should be stated. The suit is brought against the Municipal Board of Agra. The plaintiff who is a Pleader is a previous member of the Board, on which he says he sat from 1914 to 1916. Two lists are prepared by the officials of the Board under statutory authority, namely an electoral roll and a candidates' list. An election was approaching in the year 1919 and the plaintiff had been a severe critic of the Municipal Administration up to that time. He alleges, and on this matter he is the best Judge, that his criticism was such as to create hostility to himself personally among the members of the Board. He is a house-owner and an occupier at Agra and it is not denied that he is entitled to be on both the roll and the candidates' list; indeed he was on both, and the revising authority, consisting of three members of the Board, passed the roll and the list on the 31st of January 1919. Either as the result of what these persons did officially in the course of their business, or wrongly with intention in the course of their business, or as a result of the revengeful and malicious interference of some individual, either a member of the Board or an employee in the office of the Board, after the statutory sitting of the revising authority the plaintiff's name on the list was so put and his description so fabricated as to represent him to be somebody other than the person he was known to be. For example, on the candidates' list (and if his description of himself is correct, it is as a candidate that he was most objectionable to the Board) he is described by his right name but with his wrong father, his wrong caste, and his wrong occupation, all three of which put against his name were those of the owner of the house and not of himself. This being so, the Nomination Officers who acted sometime between the 31st January and 8th of March had to reject his nomination, because the person who presented himself at the nomination was not the son of the father in the candidates' list. Thereupon, the plaintiff brought this suit asking for the correction of the list as a specific relief, claiming damages for the wrong done to him, and at some later stage of the suit adding the somewhat childish claim that, because the electoral list or the candidates' list had been tampered with, the whole constitution of the Board was invalid. Before the case came on for trial the District Magistrate had corrected the list. This, indeed, happened before the election took place and it is said that the plaintiff was an unsuccessful candidate. That is in no way a defence to the suit. We know nothing about the merits of Municipal controversies at Agra, but it might happen that a candidate whose nomination had been rejected and whose qualifications had obviously become a matter of public discussion would be seriously hampered in his efforts to obtain votes, and even although he succeeded in correcting the mistake and securing his proper nomination before the election it might be sufficient in certain cases to explain his defeat. But, apart from that, in the leading case on the subject, namely Ashby and White which was decided in the reign of Queen Anne in England, the plaintiff in that case, who had been deprived of his right to vote, intended to vote for the successful candidate; none the less he had been deprived of a lawful right for which he was held entitled to recover damages. Unfortunately, the defendants have done, up to this moment, little or nothing to clear the ground and to enable the Courts to see whether or not the plaintiff's grievance is well founded What the defence may ultimately be nobody knows, because the door has been closed upon the plaintiff before that stage was reached. It is impossible to discover it from the pleadings and one is bound to observe that one's suspicions are invariably aroused against defendants who shelter themselves behind pleas which disclose nothing on the facts or merits of the case. The defendants who have been sued, and presumably rightly sued, because the plaintiff cannot know,—no member of the public can know,—what goes on behind the doors of the Municipal body, are the Municipal Board itself and individual members, including the Executive Officer. If liability is eventually established for damages, that liability, in order to be placed upon the right shoulders, must be decided according to the ordinary general principles of principal and agent. No individual member of the Board can be made liable in his own pocket, separately and independently of the Board, for an act in which he had no part or lot himself and which he did not in any way authorise. On the other hand, any individual member of the Board who either expressly or indirectly encouraged, incited, directed, or approved of, in other words, aided and abetted the attempt which was undoubtedly made by somebody to deprive the plaintiff of his right to be on the candidates' list would be liable in his own pocket, independently altogether of the question whether or not the Municipal Board would be liable as well. The Municipal Board as principal would only be liable for the act, i. e., the public funds of which the Municipality are custodians and out of which they will have to pay any damages for any corporate act committed by them, would only be liable for an act done by themselves informally, or formally by way of resolution, or by a committee of authority like the revising authority appointed by them, or by one of their servants doing what he did, although wrongfully, at a time and in a manner when and in which he is employed to do it by the Municipality, if he did it improperly, i. e., if the act were done by a clerk whose duty it was to fill in the plaintiff's name correctly and he filled it incorrectly in the ordinary course of business, the Municipality would be responsible for that.

It is perhaps desirable to say quite clearly, although it appears from what we have said already, that the ground on which the case was remanded, namely, the re consideration of the issue as to whether the Board should be declared to be altogether invalid and improperly constituted because one of the names on its election list is wrongly entered, is one which no Court ought to have entertained at all and which the lower Court should disregard and strike out of the issues altogether. In its place an issue must be put which we ourselves frame:—"What damages, if any, ought the plaintiff to recover, and from whom, in respect of the wrongful omission to record his name correctly on the candidates' list?"

This leads us to some further observations and further directions which, we think, under the special circumstances of this case and of its public importance, we ought to make. In a case of this kind, as we had occasion to remark the other day in cases of an agent suing a principal who has all the figures in his possession, or a partner suing a firm which has all the accounts and books in its possession, a plaintiff is absolutely at the mercy of the defendant who knows the facts unless he takes the steps which the law has provided, and unless the Court aids him in taking those steps, to discover the relevant documents which are in the possession of the defendant. So far as we know, there is really no power except in a suit, unless it be the power under the Criminal Procedure Code by means of a search warrant, by which any member of the public can get at documents relevant to the injury which he has suffered, if the public body which has the custody of these documents chooses to sit on them. The plaintiff in this case quite clearly, whatever else may be said about his motives, realising the difficulty, stated in his plaint that he did not know who was the author of his grievance but that it was impossible to resist the conclusion that his name was intentionally removed from the list. He has a right, and any Court trying such a suit has the duty, to insist that all documents in existence or which had been in existence which throw light on that question must be produced. The plaintiff made an effort to obtain discovery by the rather feeble machinery of a notice to produce the only effect of which is, if the other side refuses to produce, to entitle you to prove your own copy, and, as you have never seen the original it is not a very valuable right. That distinction is often lost sight of. A notice to produce is not a subpœna nor is it any part of the machinery for discovery. It merely gives you the right, if it is ignored, to prove any copy in your possession. Discovery is the machinery by which you discover what documents are in existence which are not in your possession. The defendants, not unnaturally, met the plaintiff half way, saying, no doubt correctly, that there were too many papers to file at that stage and that some might be lost, but they undertook to produce them at the proper time. It does not surprise us that the proper time never arose. It seldom does when vague promises of that kind are made. But under Order XI, rule 12 any party, like the plaintiff in this case, may without filing an affidavit apply to the Court for an order directing the other party to make discovery on oath of the documents which are or have been in his possession or power, relating to any matter in question therein. We think that in a case of this kind the plaintiff ought to have discovery, and it is not too late, and we direct the lower Court before hearing this suit again on the merits to make an order under that rule if the plaintiff makes a proper application, and not to reject it on the ground that it has been made too late. It is necessary in the case of a public body to explain how the rule should be worked. In the first place, the contention already made by the Board's Counsel that there are too many papers is based upon a misunderstanding. It is not necessary to produce all the papers in the possession of the Municipality, relating to the electoral roll and the candidates' list, of any kind whatever. All that is required is to produce for inspection the documents relating to the entry of the plaintiff's name on the candidates' list, and the electoral roll and every document, through whatever stage it has passed, relating to the plaintiff's name, whether there has been any alteration, addition, or subtraction from the original entry in such rolls of the plaintiff's name, and any correspondence between the members of the Board and the Executive Officer or Secretary or other official or clerk of the Board relating to the plaintiff's name and the corrections or alterations made on the list relating to the plaintiff. It is not necessary to flood the Court. It would be a breach of duty if the Executive Officer or the Secretary attempted to flood the Court with a number of irrelevant documents. If anything has been destroyed or weeded out it must be included by description in the affidavit in the class of documents which have been in the possession of the Municipality. There must be no attempt to bark that clause, which has been put in the rule for good reason. If a document has been in their possession, and is not now, its disappearance must be explained by an officer of the Board who knows what has become of it and why and when it was destroyed or removed. Lastly, following the ordinary practice in England with reference to a Municipal Corporation or limited company, the affidavit must be made on behalf of the Municipal Board by the Chairman or the Executive Officer, who, making their affidavits jointly as such officers, must swear that they have made all necessary enquiries of all employees in the Board with reference to the documents which they swear to in their affidavit, and if there is any document to which they make any objection, legally or otherwise, to produce, although it is relevant to this question, they must take their objection in the affidavit and the Court must decide it before hearing the case.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated 17th May 1921.

Mr. Mukand Behari Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Laxmi Narain Shukla, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an execution proceeding and the question for consideration is, whether the order of the Court below, setting aside the sale of an 8-annas share of a certain house, was justified and warranted by law.

In execution of a decree for sale of that house and other properties a notice was issued under Order XXI, rule 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure to the judgment-debtors, including the present objector, Sajjad Husain, asking them to furnish information as to the particulars to be specified in the proclamation of sale. The proclamation was issued thereafter and the property comprised in the decree was directed to be sold in four lots. Two of those lots were purchased by Sajjad Husain, who was a transferee of some property from the original mortgagor. For the third lot an offer of Rs 1,000 was received; but the Court executing the decree considered that offer insufficient. For the 4th lot an offer of Rs. 50 was received; but that offer too was considered inadequate. The sale of both these lots was, therefore, adjourned; and as the decree-holders took no further steps to proceed with the sale, the execution proceeding was struck off on the 29th October 1919.

The decree holders applied again on the 17th December 1919 for the issue of a proclamation of sale in respect of lots Nos. 3 and 4 and asked that the sale of those properties might be proceeded with. They referred in their application to the proceedings which had taken place on the previous occasion and stated that the copies of the khasra and map then filed might be perused. As this application was within one year from the date on which the previous application for execution was dismissed and the necessary particulars required to be entered in the proclamation of sale had already been ascertained in the previous proceeding, the Court directed the issue of a proclamation of sale without the issue of a fresh notice under Order XXI, rule 66, of the Code of Civil Procedure. There was no higher bid than one for Rs. 1,500 and as the estimated value of the properties was about Rs. 2,500 the sale was again adjourned and the execution proceeding was struck off on the 20th February 1920.

The next application for execution was made on the 3rd March 1920. The decree-holders referred again to the proceedings taken on the first application and asked that the proclamation of sale might be re issued. The Court did so without issuing a fresh notice under Order XXI, rule 66 of the Code and the property in question was eventually sold and purchased by the decree-holders for Rs. 1,200. The sale took place on the 28th February 1920 and was confirmed on the 7th June 1920. No objection was filed by the present objector under Order XXI, rule 90 of the Code. The present objection was filed on the 1st March 1921, which the Court below has allowed. The contention of the objector was that the sale was effected in his absence without the issue of any notice to him under Order XXI, rule 66, and that he had suffered material injury in consequence

It is not disputed that the property was worth much more than the amount fetched at the auction-sale. But if there were no bidders forthcoming to offer an adequate amount, the Court, which had already adjourned the sale twice, had no option but to close it for such price and as could then be realized. The successive applications made by the decree-holders on the 7th December 1919 and the 3rd March 1920 were practically applications to continue the previous execution proceeding and the issue of a fresh proclamation under Order XXI, rule 66, after the necessary particulars had been duly ascertained in the previous execution proceeding, was not absolutely necessary. No purpose could have been served by issuing such a notice afresh when the necessary particulars had already been once ascertained. Even if the issue of such a notice had been necessary, the omission to issue it would have been nothing more than a mere irregularity, which could have been made a ground for setting aside the sale, if material injury had resulted therefrom, under Order XXI, rule 90 of the Code of Civil Procedure, had an application to set it aside been made within the period of 30 days specified in Article 166 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908). As pointed out in Rameshur Singh v. Sheodin Singh (1), a distinction must be drawn between cases in which a Court or an official omits to do something, which a Statute enacts shall be done, and cases in which a Court or an official does something which a Statute enacts shall not be done. In the former case, the omission may not amount to more than an irregularity in procedure. In the latter, the doing of a prohibited thing is ultra vires and illegal. In Bogal Chunder Mookerjee v. Rameshur Mundul (2) the omission to issue a fresh proclamation of sale was held to be a mere irregularity and did not ipso facto vitiate the sale. In Tasadduk Rasul Khan v. Ahmad Husain (3) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the non-compliance with the provisions of section 290 of the old Code of Civil Procedure by which an interval of thirty days was required to intervene between the date of the servies of the proclamation and the date of the sale amounted only to a material irregularity and did not render the sale a nullity.

The failure to issue a notice under Order XXI, rule 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure is a much less serious omission than the holding of a sale before the lapse of the pericd required for a notice to the intending purchasers. In Thekkedath Neelu Neithiar v. Subramania Moothan (4) it was held that the failure to give notice to the judgment-debtor before settling a proclamation of sale would not of itself invalidate the sale.

Article 166 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908) is wide enough to include the grounds on which the sale is now sought to be set aside and does not allow a period of more than 90 days from the date of the sale for a motion to have it set aside.

There is no question of fraud, because the decree-holders had referred to the steps which they had already taken in the previous execution proceedings and asked the Court merely to proceed with the sale. Had the Court then insisted on making a fresh enquiry and issuing a notice under Order XXI, rule 66, there is no reason to think that the decree-holders would not have complied with the order. The objector was in Burma at the time the sale was held; but the house in question must have been in the occupation of some person on his behalf at the time. There is nothing to indicate that the decree-holders had deliberately done anything to keep the objector out of the knowledge of the projected sale and Article 181 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908) has, therefore, no application.

The question of injury is immaterial because no application to set the sale was made within the time allowed by law.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the order of the Court below is set aside. The appellants will get their costs from the respondent in both the Courts.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch I, Art. 182, Expl I—Decree for partition between plaintiff and defendants—Joint decree—Execution—Limitation.

On 9th December 1901 a partition decree awarded the plaintiff and each of five defendants a share in certain properties, leaving the share of each to be ascertained. On plaintiff's application the shares were ascertained and one share delivered to plaintiff. One of the defendants subsequently applied for allotment and delivery of his share: the share was allotted, and on his applying on 9th April 1912 it was delivered to him. On 9th December 1913 another defendant sued to obtain his share, but, by order of the Appellate Court, his plaint was treated as an application in execution as having been presented on 9th December 913, when it was objected that it was out of time having regard to the three years rule:

Held, that the partition decree should be regarded as a joint decree the execution of which was subject to the second portion of Explanation I to Article 182 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act, that the defendant was entitled to count the time from the last application for execution, viz., the 9th April 19 2, and that, therefore, the application was not barred by limitation. [p. 991, col. 2]

Appeal against the appellate order of the Subordinate Judge, Salem, in Appeal Suit No. 17 of 1920, preferred against the order of the District Munsif, Namakal, in Execution Petition No. 27 of 1917 in Original Suit No. 48 of 1901.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. N. Swaminatha Iyer and K.G. Srinivasa Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The decree was a partition decree and was a joint decree within the meaning of Explanation I to Article 182 of the Limitation Act. The third defendant is entitled to count time from the date of the last application by the 4th. The application is, therefore, in time. The decree as a whole should be taken into consideration, and its execution must be subject to the second portion of the Article Sheikh Khoorshed Hossein v. Numbee Fatima (1), Mohun Ohunder Kurmokar v.

(1) 3 C. 551; 2 C. L. R. 187; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 935

Mohesh Chunder Kurmokar (2).

Mr. B. Sitaram Row, for the Respondents.—The application by fourth defendant was not jointly for himself and others nor did it seek relief for the benefit of all the defendants. He only asked for delivery to him of his share. That will not save limitation for the relief open to others in execution.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal relates to the execution of what purports to be a partition decree passed on 9th December 1901. It was passed under the former Code and it awarded to plaintiff and each of the five defendants one share in the suit property, that share to be ascertained. The course taken by the subsequent proceedings was that, on plaintiff's application, the six shares, into which the property was to be divided, were ascertained but no allotment or delivery was made except of one share to plaintiff. Later, fourth defendant applied for allotment and delivery to him of his share and obtained allotment, but not delivery, the latter being ordered only on his filing a second petition, Execution Petition No 439 of 9th April 1912. The third defendant, here appellant, sued on 9th December 1913 to obtain his share. But the Appellate Court directed that his plaint should be treated as an application in execution; and it is with his application regarded as having been presented on 9th December 1913 that we have to deal. The main objection to it is that it is out of time with reference to the three years rule.

Third defendant's first answer to this objection is that the decree cannot be regarded as having been passed in his favour until the ascertainment of his share is complete; and it will not be complete until his present application is disposed of. Shortly, there can be no question of execution being barred against him, when the suit, so far as he is concerned, is still pending. Krishnamachariar v. Kuppammal (3) however, negatives this contention; and we must, therefore, deal with the objection more closely and with the alternative answer attempted, that the decree was passed in favour of several persons jointly within the meaning of Explanation I to Article 182, Schedule I of the Limitation Act and that third defendant can, therefore, count time from the last application for execution by another of those persons, viz., from Execution Petition No. 439 by fourth defendant for delivery of his share on 9th April 1912

It is urged and it is no doubt the case that fourth defendant's application for delivery was not made by him in any sense jointly or to enforce any joint right to relief or for the benefit of his fellow decree-holders jointly with himself and in fact it was made by him severally distinguishing the portion of the subject-matter deliverable to him and so far could have been made with propriety in execution of a several decree, as such a decree is defined in the earlier part of the Explanation. But although there may be some anomaly in the succession of the different kinds of execution appropriate to joint and several decrees, which is involved, it does not follow that the description of the decree for the purposes of the application of Article 182 must be altered. That description attaches for those purposes in the words of the Explanation "when the decree has been passed" and, in the absence of provision to the contrary, it must be applied once for all and to the decree as a whole and for all purposes. This view is consistent with the decisions in Sheikh Khoorshed Hossein v. Numbee Fatima ( ), Mohun Chunder Kurmokar v. Mohesh Chunder Kurmokar (2) and Narayan Ramchandra v. Vithal Sakharam (4). The decree before us must, therefore, for the present purpose be regarded as a joint decree; and its execution must be subject to the second portion of the Explanation to Article 182.

The third defendant's application being in time, the remaining objection is that it is for the ascertainment and delivery not only of his own share but also of that of fifth defendant, alleged to have been transferred to him under Exhibit A, and that, as regards the latter, he has no transfer of fifth defendant's right to execute. It is not necessary for us to consider how far a transfer of property carries with it generally the right of the transferor to execute a decree for its possession. For, in the present case, Exhibit A clearly refers to fifth defendant's right under the decree and we are prepared to regard that right as transferred with the property itself. The question whether Exhibit A evidences a transfer enforceable on its merits to third defendant alone has not so far been dealt with by the lower Appellate Court.

We, therefore, allow the appeal against the appellate order, set aside the lower Appellate Court's order and remand the appeal to it for disposal on the further question above referred to and in the right of the foregoing. Costs to date here and in the lower Courts will follow the result and be provided for in the lower Appellate Court's order.

The right of a collateral to challenge an alienation under the Customary Law of the Punjab extends to the case of a sale held in execution of a decree.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 9th May 1921, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Nawanshahr, District Jullundur, dated the 8th November 1920.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Badr ud Din Qureshi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal has arisen under the following circumstances.

The defendant No. 2 first obtained a mortgage over the house from defendant No. 1. Then he attached the house in execution of a money-decree against defendant No. 1 and had it sold by an order of Court. The plaintiff, as a collateral, instituted the suit for a declaration that the mortgage as well as the execution sale shall not affect his reversionary interests inasmuch as they were without consideration and necessity. Both the Courts below have concurred in dismissing the suit on the following grounds:

(1) That a sale conducted in obedience to an order of Court cannot be challenged by a reversioner in this manner, and

(2) That as the mortgage merged into the sale no decree could be passed in respect of it also.

The plaintiff has come up in second appeal to this Court and the decisions of the Courts below are contested on his behalf by his learned Vakil, Mr. Fakir Chand. The learned Vakil relies upon the Full Bench ruling reported as Sadhu Singh v. Secretary of State for India (1), where it was held by a majority of the Judges constituting the Full Bench that where ancestral immoveable property held by a person subject to Punjab Customary Law is attached and sold by order of a Criminal Court under section 88 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the sale conveys the life interest of that person only, and does not extinguish the right of inheritance after his death of his male lineal descendants or of collaterals descended from the original holder of the property.

A perusal of the judgment of the majority of the Judges clearly shows that the rule there laid down applies in principle to the facts of the present case also. In this view it is not necessary to express an opinion, with regard to the question of the merger of the mortgage into the sale.

I accept the appeal and setting aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court remand the case to that Court under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, for a re-trial. Costs will abide the result. Court-fee on the memorandum of appeal in this Court shall be refunded.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1893), s. 209 —Powers of Committing Magistrate—Committal to Sessions Court, when to be ordered.

All that a Committing Magistrate dealing with a case has to do under section 209, Criminal Procedure Code, is to see if a prima facie case has been made out, but he is not precluded from drawing reasonable inferences from facts deposed to by the prosecution witnesses where more than one inference can be drawn and to discharge the accused where the evidence is unworthy of credit. He has to see whether the evidence is such as to render the case a fit one for the Jury to decide between conflicting probabilities or whether it clearly points to there being no prima facie case for the accused to meet.

Petition under sections 435 and 439, Criminal Procedure Code, and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Magistrate, Ramnad, in Criminal Revision Case No. 5 of 1921 presented against the judgment of the Sub-Divisional First Class Magistrate, Sivakasi, in Criminal Case No. 73 of 1920.

Messrs. T. Rangachariar and A. Swaminatha Iyer, for the Petitioners.

Mr. J. O. Adam, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The petitioners were charged under sections 147, 148, 379 and 323, Indian Penal Code, and the First Class Magistrate of Sivakasi discharged the accused as he was of opinion that no prima facie case was made out. On revision the District Magistrate directed the accused to be committed for trial to the Sessions Court. He was of opinion that if theft was the common object of the rioters the offence becomes one of dacoity and so triable exclusively by the Court of Session. He was also of opinion that the Magistrate is bound to commit if there is any evidence in support of the charge.

I am unable to agree with the view taken by the District Magistrate. In the present case the First Class Magistrate has written a careful judgment in which he discussed the evidence on the side of the prosecution and comes to the conclusion that it is not untrustworthy. The District Magistrate does not go into the evidence and says that the Magistrate's appreciation of the evidence is wrong. He thinks it would be out of place to go into the evidence.

Section 209 of the Code of Criminal Procedure gives the Magistrate power to discharge the accused charged with offences triable exclusively by a Court of Session if after going into the evidence he is of opinion that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused person for trial. To hold that, where there is some evidence, however untrustworthy in the Magistrate's opinion, he is bound to commit a person for trial will be to make the preliminary enquiry directed by the Code a mere matter of form while it is intended to be a safeguard against false or frivolous cases being sent up for trial and innocent men from being put to the trouble and expense of undergoing a trial in the Court of Session.

It is no doubt true that all that a Committing Magistrate has to see is, whether there is a prima facie case made out and that it is not his business to usurp the functions of the Sessions Judge or the Jury and I agree with the observations of Bakewell, J., in National Bank of India, Ltd. v. Kothandarama Chetti (1) so far. I respectfully dissent from his view that the Magistrate cannot draw reasonable inferences from facts deposed to by the prosecution witnesses where more than one inference can be drawn, and agree with the view taken by Sundara Iyer, J.

In Bai Parvati, In re (2) it was held that where the Committing Magistrate finds that the evidence tendered for the prosecution is unworthy of credit it is his duty, under section 209 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to discharge the accused. A similar view was taken by Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in Danappa Pillai, In re (3).

It is not, as pointed out in Bai Parvati, In re (2), easy to draw the line between the Magistrate's duty and the Sessions Court's prerogative and each case must be treated on its merits. What the Court has to see is whether the evidence is such as to render the case a fit one for the Jury to decide between the conflicting probabilities or whether it clearly points to there being no prima facie case for the accused to meet. In arriving at a decision the Committing Magistrate must have discretion and power to weigh the evidence.

In the present case the Magistrate has given excellent grounds for the conclusion he has arrived at. I reverse the order of the District Magistrate.

It was urged for the accused that he should have been tried at Bombay and his trial at Harda was without jurisdiction and had caused failure of justice:

Held, that as the procuring of the receipt was an essential part of the deception which went to make up the offence of cheating and as nothing was left to be done for the accused but to present the receipt and to effect the delivery his act was more than that of preparation and his trial at Harda was perfectly legal [p 996, col. 1]

ORDER.

DRAKE-BROCKMAN, J. C.—The applicant, Shiamji, has been re-tried in accordance with the order passed by Batten, A. J. C., in Criminal Appeal No. 153 of 1920 on the 12th October 1920. In the new charge it is alleged that, by sending the Railway receipts (Exhibit P-38 for 200 bales and Exhibit P-42 for 100 bales) dated the 27th March 1919 to Arjun Khemji at Bombay when he had only 200 bales at Harda, the applicant deceived that firm and fraudulently induced it to pay Rs. 40,000. This charge was framed on the 22nd November 1920, the first date on which the applicant appeared after the disposal of his appeal. The Magistrate examined no additional witnesses for the prosecution. The applicant caused a number of witnesses already examined to be re summoned for cross examination and after this had been done made the following statement when called upon to enter upon his defence:—

"I am not guilty. I did not cheat Arjun Khemji. I had sufficient credit with him to cover the amount he paid on the hundis or the amount of hundis, taking into account the value of 200 bales which the Judicial Commissioner has found belonged to me on the 27th March 1919 as well as the balance which stood in my favour in Arjun Khemji's account on the 27th March 1919. I adduce no evidence in my defence. I do not wish to summon any."

The trying Magistrate, who was evidently of opinion that Batten, O. J. C., had finally determined that Arjun Khemji would not have advanced Rs 40,000 had they known that the two Railway receipts really covered 200 bales only, considered that the firm would not have taken into account any balance which the applicant already had at his credit. The practice of the firm being to advance only 65 to 70 per cent, on the value of goods for which Railway receipts had reached them, the Magistrate held that Rs. 40,000 was the maximum amount which the firm would naturally have advanced in respect of 300 bales worth Rs. 63,000, the market-value on the 27th March 1919. Considering that the accused had been given an opportunity for rebutting the charge by proving that he had 300 bales and not 200 only to consign, he convicted and sentenced him under section 420, Indian Penal Code, to 18 months' rigorous imprisonment.

The applicant appealed to the Sessions Judge who took the same view. He was of opinion that the 300 bales of which Arjun Khemji eventually took delivery were really consigned under Railway receipts Nos. 162/64 (Exhibit P 28), 163/6 (Exhibit P 29) and 162/1 stake (Exhibit P-30) each for 100 bales. He had no doubt that the applicant intended to make good the shortage of 100 bales by subsequently procuring and despatching that quantity as he had done on a previous occasion. The offence was regarded as a serious one and the sentence was maintained.

The principal point pressed in this Court is that Arjun Khemji having advanced money (Rs. 40,000) on Exhibits P-38 and P 42 the cheating for which the applicant has been convicted took place at Bombay and the trial should, therefore, have taken place at Bombay as required by section 177, Criminal Procedure Code. It is urged, on the authority of Queen v. Piran (1), that there has been a failure of justice which prevents the mistake of jurisdiction being cured by section 531, Criminal Procedure Code. In Bombay the case would have been tried by a Presidency Magistrate to whom jurisdiction in that town is given by section 20, Criminal Procedure Code, and the appeal would have lain under section 411 to the High Court where it would have been heard by two Judges. It is also pointed out that a trial in Bombay would have been an entirely fresh one and that the trying Magistrate would have been less influenced by the pronouncements in the judgment of Batten, A. J. C., than the Harda Magistrate was; also that the accused would have been examined with special reference to the charge of cheating Arjun Khemji had such a charge been framed. Stress is also laid for the applicant on the fact that Arjun, the member of the firm by whose order Rs 40,000 was advanced, has not been examined and it is contended that this omission would not have occurred had the trial taken plaes in Bombay.

For the Crown it is contended that inasmuch as Exhibit P-42 (Railway receipt 162/32) was taken at and despatched from Harda, the Court at that place had jurisdiction. The contention is based on that portion of section 182, Criminal Procedure Code, which runs as follows:—

"Where an offence consists of several acts done in different local areas, it may be inquired into or tried by a Court having jurisdiction over any of such local areas".

For the applicant it is urged that taking of the false Railway receipt constituted no more than preparation for the final act of cheating and so was not one of a series of acts making up that offense. The applicant's position is said to be similar to that of a man who purchases a sword at one place and commits a murder with it at another. Cheating, according to the definition in section 415, Indian Penal Code, consists of two acts;

"(1) deceiving any person.

(2) fraudulently or dishonestly inducing the person so deceived to deliver any property to any person."

Section 182, Criminal Procedure Code, is said to apply only when there is room for doubt as to the local area in which a trial should take place, whereas no room for doubt can be said to exist where the offense committed is cheating.

In my opinion the applicant by taking the false Railway receipt did more than really prepare for cheating Arjun Khemji. He did what was in the circumstances an act essential to causing the deception and forthwith made the document over to his relative Deoji (P. W. No. 8) for delivery to Arjun Khemji. The carrier was left no discretion to retain the receipt and, in these circumstances, it seems to me clear that even if Deoji had not delivered the receipt, the applicant would have been guilty of an attempt to cheat. As remarked by J. D. Mayne in his Criminal Law of India (page 926, 3rd Edition), the real difficulty in distinguishing between preparation and attempt arises in determining where a given act or set of acts passes from the former stage into the latter. Where the commission of an offence requires the performance of a series of acts and the person commences this series with the view to carry it out to its completion, he has, in the language of section 511, Indian Penal Code, done an act towards the commission of the offence in the attempt to commit the offence. This view is supported by the decision in Empress of India v. Mula (2). There a money-lender sent one of his debtors to personate another and to purchase in that other's name a stamped paper in consequence of which the stamp-vendor endorsed the other debtor's name on the paper as purchaser. The intention was that the endorsement might be used against the other debtor in a judicial proceeding. It was held that the offence of fabricating false evidence had been actually committed and that the money-lender was properly convicted of abetting the commission of that offence. In the present case the procuring of the receipt was an essential part of the deception which went to make up the offence of cheating. So far as the applicant is concerned, nothing was left to be done but to present the receipt and to effect the delivery he selected an innocent agent whose act must, in the circumstances, be taken to be his own.

I consider it incorrect to regard section 182, Criminal Procedure Code, as applicable only to cases where some place of trial cannot be laid down with absolute certainty. For example, the section applies to cases where the offence is a continuing one, so that if A steals a buffalo in District W and takes it through District X into District Y, he may be tried for theft in any of the three districts though it is beyond doubt that District W would be a proper place of trial.

On the whole, I conclude, though not without hesitation, that the applicant was triable at Harda.

(2) 2 A. 103; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 616.

The next point pressed is that, according to the Sessions Judge, the applicant doubtless intended to obtain and despatch 100 bales to make up the full quantity of 300. The correct inference from this is said to be that the applicant had no fraudulent or dishonest intent. It is certainly a fact that the applicant had obtained 230 bales from the Mitsui Bhusan Company on the 23rd and 25th March 1919 and that on the 26th idem he had at Harda station 302 bales in all.

Moreover, the Mitsui Bhusan Company was under contract to supply him with 834 bales, of which 604 were still to be delivered. It was not till 4 P.M. on the 27th March that Ranchordas (P.W. No. 5) took over 100 bales from the applicant in part satisfaction of the applicant's debt to Radhakisan Jaikisan. In this connection, however, it has to be remembered also that the applicant had on the 22nd March made over to the agent of the Mitsui Bhusan Company 2 hundis of Rs. 25,000 each for which he had to send a consignment to Arjun Khemji. Whether the applicant obtained Exhibit P 42 (Railway receipt 162/32) before or after being obliged to relinquish 100 bales out of 300 to Ranchordas, it seems impossible to hold that he acted otherwise than fraudulently in allowing the receipt not represented by goods to reach Arjun Khemji. He did not, when examined at the first trial or in his defence at the second trial, allege any intention to make good the shortage; indeed, he could not well have done so seeing that he professed to have had 400 bales available when he relinquished 100.

For the applicant reliance is placed upon Illustration (g) to section 415, Indian Penal Code, which runs as follows: —

"A intentionally deceives Z into a belief that A means to deliver to Z certain quantity of indigo plant which he does not intend to deliver and thereby dishonestly induces Z to advance money upon the faith of such delivery. A cheats; but if A at the time of obtaining the money, intends to deliver the indigo plants and afterwards breaks his contract and does not deliver it he does not cheat, but is liable only to a civil action for breach of contract."

The facts of the present case, however, are quite different. The applicant admittedly knew that he should not have drawn any hundi on the strength of a consignment unless he had made over the goods to the Railway Company and received from Arjun Khemji an acknowledgment for the Railway receipt. In these circumstances, I do not think he can be heard to say that he intended, if possible, to find 300 more bales and despatch them by the time a waggon was available. He knew that there would be delay in loading and his action may be compared to that of a thief who, obtaining access to a receptacle which is only opened at intervals, abstracts money which he hopes to re-place before next opening. In the illustration relied upon, A was not found to be already in possession of indigo when he took money from Z and herein lies the difference between that case and the present one.

The fourth and fifth grounds in the application for revision are not pressed, the applicant's Counsel not challenging the finding that the applicant had only 200 bales available on the 27th March 1919 for despatch to Arjun Khemji.

The only other point which has to be considered is concerned with the attitude of Arjun, the then managing partner in Arjun Khemji, with respect to the sum of Rs. 40,000 which he paid on the two hundis given by the applicant to the Mitsui Bhusan Company. It is urged in this connection that the prosecution has failed to show that Arjun would not have paid Rs. 40,000 if he had known that 200 bales only were on their way to Bombay and that according to the evidence of Arjun Khemji's cashier, Jetha Bhai, (P. W. No. 27), given in cross examination after the revised charge was framed the applicant had a sum of Rs. 19,300 at his credit with the firm on the 27th March 1919.

It is an extraordinary feature of this case that though Arjun is said to have been cheated he himself was not examined for the prosecution. Both the trying Magistrate and the Sessions Judge have relied for their finding that so much as Rs. 40,000 would not have been paid on the hundis if the Railway receipts sent from Harda on the 27th March 1919 had covered 200 bales only on the evidence of Jetha Bhai to the effect that the practice of the firm was to advance not more than 65 to 70 per cent. of the market value of a consignment. Now, it is true that on the 14th February 1920 when examined in chief Jetha Bhai gave this practice as the reason why Rs. 40,000 were paid upon the hundis. At that time, however, no charge of having actually cheated Arjun Khemji was in contemplation and in cross-examination the witness was not questioned about the payment of Rs. 40,000. After the new charge was framed Jetha Bhai was re called for further cross-examination and on the 11th April last made statements from which it would appear that on the 27th March 1919 the applicant had a balance of Rs. 19,300 at his credit with Arjun Khemji. He was re-examined for the prosecution and then stated as follows:

"My master told me to pay Rs. 40,000 on the two hundis of Rs. 50,000 and I paid it. I cannot say why he told me to pay Rs. 40,000."

Jetha Bhai was a mere cashier and there is no ground for supposing that he was in a position to state with certainty the reasons which led his employers to make a particular payment. It is no doubt prima facie improbable that Arjun, in paying Rs. 40,000, was actuated by any other consideration than that 300 bales of cotton worth about Rs. 63,000 were on their way from Harda to Bombay. Section 60 of the Indian Evidence Act, however, requires that the best evidence of which a fact is susceptible should be given and, in the circumstances, no one but Arjun himself can say with certainty that he would not have paid Rs. 40,000 had he known that 200 bales only were available for despatch on the 27th March 1919 or what his actual reasons for making the payment were.

The Crown is unable to explain why Arjun himself was not examined by the prosecution at any stage of the trial and the Standing Counsel raised no objection to his being examined now. In my opinion it is essential, in the interests of justice, to have this man's evidence and accordingly under section 439, read with section 428, Criminal Procedure Code, I direct that he be examined by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Harda. The applicant will be present when the additional evidence is taken, remaining on the same bail until his application has been finally disposed of by this Court. The District Magistrate will see that the bonds already given are, if necessary, extended so as duly to secure the applicant's attendance. The evidence to be now taken should be certified to this Court so as to reach it on or before the 18th October and the application will be taken up for final disposal on the 25th idem.

BATTEN, J. C.—This order is to be read in continuation of the order of Drake-Brockman, J. C., dated the 10th September 1921. In accordance with the directions therein given Arjun Khemji has now been examined as a witness. His evidence may conveniently be quoted in full:—

"My firm in Bombay is known as that of Arjun Khemji. We are cotton merchants as well as brokers. I am the senior partner of the firm. I know the accused Shiamji. In March and April 1919 I had dealings with Shiamji of Harda in cotton. I remember having received two Railway receipts from Shiamji towards the end of March 1919 and a hundi for Rs. 50,000 payable to Mithsu Bhusan and Company. I paid only Rs. 40,000 being 70 per cent. of the value of the goods for which receipts had been received. This is the usual practice of my firm. When I recieve Railway receipts for goods, I first examine the accounts of the person sending the receipts and then I add to that the value of the goods for which Railway receipts have been received at the then market rate and advance 70 per cent. on the total of both. I advanced Rs. 40,000 on the Railway receipts above referred to because the value together with the balance at credit of the accused's accounts amounted to Rs. 40,000 at 70 per cent. Had I known that the accused was sending me 200 bales of cotton instead of 300 for which receipts had been received, I cannot, after this lapse of three years, say whether I would have advanced Rs. 40,000 or not. Had I received a wire from some one in Harda telling me that the accused had deceived me and was despatching 200 instead of 300 bales, but had sent Railway receipts for 300 bales, I cannot still say whether I would have advanced him Rs. 4,000 or not. I advanced Rs. 40,000 on the Railway receipts for 300 bales.

"Cross-examined by Mr. Deoskar.

"Jetha Bai is my cashier. He gave evidence in this Court on my bahikathas which he brought with him. The accounts of the accused given by Jetha Bai are correct. Radakishen Jaikishen of Harda never had any dealings with my firm before 1919."

It is contended on behalf of the applicant for revision that, according to this evidence, it is not established that the firm of Arjun Khemji paid Rs. 40,000 to Mitsu Bhusan and Company because Arjun Khemji believed that the two Railway receipts covered 300 bales of cotton, and would not have paid that amount to Mitsu Bhusan if Arjun Khemji had known that only 200 bales of cotton had been despatched. It is further contended that, this being so, there has been no completed offence of cheating.

For the Crown it is represented that the evidence of Arjun Khemji given after such a lapse of time cannot be accepted as convincing. For the value of 200 bales was Rs. 42,000, and of 300 bales was Rs. 63,000. If the Rs. 19,300 already to the credit of the applicant be added to Rs. 63,000, the total comes to Rs. 82,300, 70 per cent. of which is Rs. 57,610, a sum greater than Rs. 50,000. If Rs. 19,300 be added to Rs. 42,000 the total comes to Rs. 61,300,70 per cent. of which is Rs. 42,910. Again 70 per cent. of Rs. 63,000 is Rs. 44,100. It is suggested that if Arjun Khemji had really taken into account the Rs. 19,300 already at applicant's credit, he would have paid Rs. 40,000 on the two hundis of Rs. 50,000, since he had no reason to suppose that there were only 200 bales, and must have paid only Rs. 40,000 as roughly 70 per cent. on Rs. 63,000 without taking into account the Rs. 19,300.

Arjun has not been very well examined and it is not made clear why he paid Rs. 40,000 instead of Rs. 50,000 but we must take his evidence as it stands, and that evidence does not prove that he would not have paid Rs. 40,000 even if he had known there were only 200 bales. It is thus not proved that he paid Rs. 40,000 because he believed there were 300 bales

The offense of cheating was, therefore, not complete.

The learned Standing Counsel, however, argues that the applicant is guilty of the offense of attempting to commit the offense of cheating under section 420, Indian Penal Code. The hundies were drawn for Rs. 50,000 and the applicant by sending Railway receipts whose apparent value was Rs. 63,000, though their real value was only Rs. 42,000, attempted to cheat by so inducing Arjun Khemji to pay Rs. 50,000. For the applicant reliance is placed on the wording of section 237 (2) Criminal Procedure Code, which runs: "When the accused is charged with an offense, he may be convicted of having attempted to commit that offence, although the attempt is not separately charged". Special stress is laid on the words "that offense" and it is argued that no offense was charged in respect of Rs. 50,000, and that as regards the Rs. 40,000 mentioned in the charge, there can be no conviction of attempt to cheat, since Arjun, according to the evidence might have paid Rs. 40,000, even if he had known that there were only 200 bales of cotton. The words of the charge are set out in paragraph 3 of the Sessions Judge's judgment and the gist of it is given in my learned predecessor's order dated the 13th August 1921.

After careful study of the authorities I am of opinion that the appellant is guilty of the offence of attempting to cheat. The following is an abstract of the law in England on the subject, to be found at page 703 of Volume IX of Halsbury's Laws of England:-

"If a defendant is indicted for obtaining property by false pretences and the evidence proves that the defendant made the alleged false pretences, that they were false, and that the defendant had an intent to defraud, but the evidence fails to prove that the defendant obtained the property or that the alleged false pretences led to the obtaining the defendant may be convicted of the misdemeanour of the attempt to obtain by false pretences."

It is now settled law both in England and British India, that an attempt is possible, even when the offense attempted cannot be committed; as, when a person, intending to pick another person's pocket, thrusts his hand into the pocket, but finds it empty. That such an act would amount to a criminal attempt, appears from the illustration to section 511, Indian Penal Code. In doing such an act, the offender's intention is to commit a complete offense, and his act only falls short of the offense by reason of some circumstance which has prevented the completion of the offense. It is sought to distinguish the present case on the ground that the full offence was not impossible for Arjan might have been deceived, but he might on his evidence have paid the Rs 40,000 even if he had known there were only 200 bales, and, therefore, did not pay because he was deceived. But the nature of the obstacle which prevents the offense being completed makes no difference, as is recognised in the words underlined (italicised) in the above quotation from Halsbury's Laws of England, which are based on the case of Reg v. Hensler (3). That case has been referred to and followed in Government of Bengal v. Umesh Chunder Mitter (4), in which it was held that a person may be guilty of an attempt to cheat although the person he attempts to cheat is forewarned and is, therefore, not cheated. In the Calcutta case the accused attempted to obtain payment of half currency notes alleging the other halves were lost. The Currency Office knew that the allegation was false, as the other halves had been cancelled and the holder of them had been paid. In that case the Currency Office did not pay the accused and never had any intention to pay. The case of Reg. v. Hensler (3) is, however, analogous to the present case. The accused was indicted for attempting to obtain money by false pretences in a begging letter. In reply to the letter the prosecutor sent to the prisoner 5 shillings, but he stated in his evidence that he knew that the statements in the letters were untrue. It was held that the prisoner might be convicted of an attempt to obtain money on false pretences, and that the offence was committed as soon as the letter was posted. In that case the prosecutor paid the money although he was not deceived, just as in this case Arjun paid the Rs 40,000 irrespective of whether there were 200 bales or 300 bales.

My learned predecessor has observed that by delivering the Railway receipt to Dayji (3) (1870) 11 Cox C. C. 570, 22 L. T. 691; 19 W. R. 108.

(4) 16 C. 310; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 204.

for delivery to Arjun the applicant committed an act essential for causing deception, and even if Deoji had not delivered the receipt the applicant was guilty of an attempt to cheat. To send a Railway receipt for 300 bales when there were only 200 was, in the circumstances of the case, clearly fraudulent. The applicant did an act towards deceiving Arjun Khemji into believing that 300 bales had been despatched, with a view to induce Arjun Khemji to pay money to a Japanese Firm. In this view of the case it makes no difference that the charge refers only to Rs. 40,000 since that sum is included in the Rs. 50,000 of the hundis, and the applicant's fraudulent intention covered the whole of the money which he hoped to be paid on his behalf on the strength of the false Railway receipt, even though there were Rs. 19,300 already to his credit. I am of opinion that the applicant is clearly guilty of the offence of attempting to commit an offence of cheating under section 420, Indian Penal Code.

All the grounds for revision have now been disposed of.

Under section 423 (1) (b) (2), Criminal Procedure Code, I alter the conviction into one under sections 420 and 511, Indian Penal Code, of an offence of attempting to commit an offence of cheating under section 420, Indian Penal Code. As the offence of cheating was not complete, I reduce the sentence to one of rigorous imprisonment for one year.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 57-B OF 1921.

MRS. BASCH alias MA THI—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 403—Criminal breach of trust—Jewellery entrusted for sale—Jewellery pledged—Pawnee, whether can be ordered to return jewellery—Magistrate, duty of.

A Criminal Court ought not to usurp the functions of a Civil Court and assist a complainant in recovering goods, which were made over to the accused to dispose of, from the person to whom they were disposed of, merely because the accused did not dispose of them in accordance with the instructions given to him. [p. 10 col. 2]

The complainant entrusted the accused with certain jewellery for sale. The accused, however, pledged them to a money-lender. The Magistrate convicted the accused for criminal breach of trust and ordered the return of jewellery to the complainant:

Held, that as possession of the jewellery was not obtained wrongfully by the accused, the Magistrate was not justified in ordering the return of the jewellery to the complainant in the absence of bad faith on the part of the pawnee. [p. 1001, col. 2.]

Review of an order of the Eastern Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Rangoon, dated the 14th February 1921, passed in Criminal Regular Trial No. 439 of 1920.

Mr. Camragnac, for the Applicant.

Mr. Latker, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Some time about the beginning of August 1920, the date is uncertain, Mrs. Basch made over a pair of diamond bangles, two diamond rings a diamond pin and a pair of diamond ear studs (Nadaungs) to Moung Gyi, a goldsmith, to sell on her account in order to raise money required by her for the purchase of a house.

Moung Gyi was a person in whom she placed the fullest confidence in fact, as she said, she considered him almost as her son.

Instead of selling the jewellery Maung Gyi pledged the diamond pin to Annamalai Chetty on the 8th August, the ear studs on the 8th September and the diamonds from the rings on the 10th September.

On each occasion Maung Gyi and his wife executed promissory-notes for the sums advanced and for the money borrowed on the 8th August and 8th September. Maung Nyun, a client of the Chetty, also signed the promissory notes.

Maung Gyi was convicted of criminal breach of trust with respect of these articles and the Magistrate, without giving reasons and apparently without hearing the Chetty, ordered the return of the diamonds and jewellery to Mrs. Basch.

I am asked to revise this order on the ground that the jewellery was handed to Mung Gyi by Mrs. Basch for disposal, that he did not obtain possession fraudulently and that the money was advanced by the Chetty in good faith.

ANNA MALAI CHETTY v. MRS. BASCH.

It is contended on behalf of the Chetty that, under section 178 of the Contract Act, a person who is in possession of any goods may make a valid pledge provided that the person acts in good faith, and under circumstances which are not such as to raise a reasonable presumption that the person was acting improperly and provided also that such goods have not been obtained from their lawful owner by means of an offence or fraud.

In the present instance possession was not obtained wrongfully. Maung Gyi was entrusted with the articles to sell and had he sold them the property therein would undoubtedly have pased to the buyer.

It is difficult to see why the Chetty should hesitate to take in pledge articles which he admittedly might have bought without fear. In Stephen Aviet v. King Emperor (1). A entrusted some jewels to B. to sell. Instead of selling them B gave them to his niece C. who pawned them to D. B. was convicted of criminal breach of trust and the Magistrate ordered the return of the jewels to A. Irwin, J., set aside the order and directed the return of the jewels to D. laying down the broad principle that as A. had given the jewels to B. to dispose of for money he was not entitled to the assistance of a Criminal Court in recovering them from a person to whom they were so disposed of.

On behalf of Mrs. Basch it is argued that the pawnee was not acting in good faith and must have known that there was something suspicious about the transaction. It is argued that the list of artistles made by Inspector Xavier, when he searched the Chetty's house, shows that in the course of some two months he advanced to Maung Gyi upwards of Rs. 60,000, and received in pledge property to the value of Rs. 2,50,000, and that he must have known Maung Gyi had no right to dispose of all this property. Annamalai Chetty was not cross examined as to this list and was a witness for the prosecution in the breach of trust case. He did not attempt to conceal the articles pledged from the Police, and apparently the loans and the articles pledged were duly entered in his accounts in the ordinary course of business. There is nothing on the record as it stands to show that there was anything in the transaction to raise a reasonable presumption in the pawnee's mind that the pawner was acting improperly.

Maung Gyi was a person who was highly trusted and was given jewels to dispose of by jewellers of standing, as transpires in other proceedings. He was introduced to the Chetty by Maung Aung Nyun, a goldsmith and client of his, who actually signed two of the three promissory-notes taken for the advances on the articles in question as the guarantee of the genuineness of the transactions.

The circumstances are not similar to Kong Lone v. Ma Kay (2) since in that case there was prima facie evidence that the jewels had been obtained by fraud.

I cannot agree with the obiter dictum of Twomey, J., in Nanalal Babu v. Maung Tun Yun (3) that, in the case of a broker who sold jewels and misappropriated the sale proceeds, if the accused had pledged the jewels instead of selling them, it would be right to order the restoration of the jewels to the complainant.

The Magistrate would not have been justified in ordering the return of the jewellery to the complainant in the present case unless it was shown that there was bad faith on the part of the Chetty. This has not been found by the Magistrate, who has, as I have already pointed out, given no reasons for his order.

The Chetty may quite well have regarded Maung Gyi as a broker and acted in good faith. I am quite in accord with the principle enunciated in the Stephen Aviet's case (1); it is not for the Criminal Court to usurp the functions of a Civil Court and assist complainant in recovering from the person to whom they were disposed of goods which were made over to the accused to dispose of, merely because the accused did not dispose of them in accordance with the instructions given to him.

I set aside the Magistrate's order and direct that the articles in question be returned to the applicant R. M. P. A. Annamalai Chetty.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 288, 503—Commission to examine witness in serious trial not desirable—Identifier of parda-nashin witness not put on oath Statement, whether admissible—Statement made before Committing Magistrate, portion of, when admissible before Sessions trial.

The issue of a Commission for the examination of an important witness, such as an eye-witness, in a serious criminal trial is not desirable and should only be adopted for the most cogent reasons. [p. 1004, col 1.]

Where an identifier of a parda-nashin lady witness has not been put on oath the statement of the lady cannot be accepted in evidence, as there is no certainty that the woman examined is the same who was to be examined [p. 003, col 1.]

Statements of witnesses recorded by a Committing Magistrate cannot be used in evidence in a Sessions trial under section 288, Criminal Procedure Code, without the attention of the witness being drawn to the portion which it is desired to use. [p. 1003, col 2.]

Death reference under section 374, Criminal Procedure Code, as well as an appeal by the accused againt an order of the Judicial Commissioner, Chota Nagpur.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—The appellant in this case, Lachhmi Lal, has been convicted under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code for the murder of one Nanhak Lal and has been sentenced to death by the Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur. Lachhmi Lal is a relation of Nanhak and the case for the prosecution is, that Nanhak was returning home from Mirzagunj Bazar on the 27th of August last when, at about 6 P. M., he was attacked by Lachhmi Lal with a sword. The attack was made on a foot path in village Jaggernathdih where both the appellant and the deceased lived. Three persons are said to have witnessed the occurrence or some part of it; namely, Musammat Thagni Barbin, Dilo Singh and Musammat Laro Kumari. Nanhak's sister, Musammat Munshi Kumari, heard a cry that Lachhmi had cut Nanhak with a sword and on going out she saw Lachhmi running away. She then found her brother lying severely wounded on Kartik Lal's bari. She took him home on a khatia, called the villagers and the chowkidar. The chowkidar gave an information to the thana three miles off at about 1 A.M., the Sub Inspector came at once, Nanhak was sent to the hospital and died there on the 3rd of September.

I do not propose to discuss the evidence which has been adduced in this case, because the trial has been of such a perfunctory nature and there have been so many irregularities committed in the course of the trial by the learned Judicial Commissioner that the learned Government-Advocate has said that he is compelled to ask for a re-trial and that if his prayer be not granted he does not propose to try and support the conviction. The course he has adopted is, in my opinion, a very right one and the only course which was really open to him. We are, therefore, only concerned with the question of whether we should acquit the accused as we are asked to do by the learned Counsel for the appellant or to order a re trial.

The main grounds on which the prayer for a re-trial is based are three :—(1) that the evidence of the eye-witnesses, Musammat Thagni and Dilo Singh, has been so perfunctorily recorded that it is impossible to say from their evidence whether they really saw the occurrence or not; (2) that the evidence of one of the most important witnesses, namely, Musammat Laro, is not on the record and is, therefore, not available to the Crown; and (3) that the statement which was made to the Sub Inspector of Police by Nanhak before his death and recorded by him has not been properly brought on the record.

In regard to the first point a mere glance at the evidence of Musammat Thagni and Dilo Singh is sufficient to show that the comment on this evidence which has been made by the learned Government-Advocate is justified. Thagni's examination-in chief consists of five lines of print and Dilo's of about double this. It is impossible to discover from Dilo's evidence where he was when he saw the part of the occurrence to which he deposes or whether in fact he could have seen any part of it. The same remark applies to Musammat Thagni's evidence and it is also impossible to discover where she was working or how she happened to see the occurrence, It may be that the witnesses are perfectly good witnesses whose evidence can be accepted, but it is so sketchily recorded that it is impossible to come to any conclusion on this point.

The next matter is in regard to the witness Musammat Laro Kumari. Here the learned Judicial Commissioner adopted a very extraordinary procedure. An application was made by the lady to be examined behind a parda. This is a very ordinary request which is made in the case of a parda-nashin woman and the usual procedure is for the woman to be brought into Court in a palki and examined by the Judge. If this had been done, there would have been nothing to be said although the request was one which probably should not have been granted as she appears to have been examined in the ordinary way before the Committing Magistrate; the learned Judicial Commissioner, however, treated the application as one for examination on Commission and directed Commission to issue to one Mr. Friend Pereira, apparently a Magistrate of the First Class. In the first place, the issue of a Commission for the examination of an important witness, such as an eye witness, in a serious criminal trial is a procedure which is much to be deprecated and which should never be adopted except for the most cogent reasons; yet not only in this case were there no cogent reasons but there was no application for issue of Commission and no reason at all for the issue of Commission was given. Further, no writ of commission appears to have been issued and there is no return to the Commission. The woman's evidence is merely placed on the record without comment. For these reasons alone I would not be prepared to take her statement into consideration, but there is another reason why it cannot be accepted in evidence; namely, that the identifier of the lady does not appear to have been put on his oath so that there is no certainty that the woman who has been examined is Musammat Laro. There is another matter in connection with Musammat Laro's evidence to which it is necessary to refer. Her deposition before the Committing Magistrate has been put in. There is nothing to show under what section this has been done, but presumably it has been put in under section 288. To put in such evidence is permissible, but it has been repeatedly laid down and it is now settled law that such statements should not be put in without the attention of the witness being drawn to the portion of the statement which it is desired to use. We are informed by the learned Government Advocate and by the learned Counsel for the appellant that this practice is not generally followed and if this is so I would suggest that the attention of the Courts be drawn to the matter.

The last point is the use which has been made of Nanhak's statement to the Sub-Inspector. The Sub-Inspector has put in the statemnt and it has been used by the learned Judicial Commissioner. The prosecution was, under certain circumstances, entitled to examine the Sub-Inspector as to what Nanhak had told him, but the statement of Nanhak recorded by the Sub-Inspector could not be evidence and it is somewhat surprising that a Judge of the experience of the learned Judicial Commissioner should have fallen into this error.

There are other matters in respect of which the procedure adopted by the learned Judicial Commissoner is open to criticism but the points which I have referred to are sufficient for the purpose of indicating that it is necessary that there should be a re trial. The learned Counsel for the appellant has urged that we should acquit the accused and this would, in ordinary circumstances, I think be the correct course to pursue, but in the peculiar circumstances of the present case I would accede to the prayer of the learned Government Advocate. There is evidence some of which has been so perfunctorily recorded that it is impossible to say whether it is of value or not and there is also evidence which is not properly on the record.

Possibly this may be partly due to the fault of the prosecution but it is also due to the fault of the Trial Court. What the value of this evidence may be we cannot say as not being on the record we cannot consider it. I would, therefore, as I have already indicated, accede to the request of the learned Government Advocate and set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the appellant be re tried.

Ross, J.—I agree.

At the request of the learned Government-Advocate and with the assent of the learned Counsel for the appellant we direct that the case be transferred to Gaya for trial by the Sessions Judge of that district.

GOURI NARAIN BARUA—ACCUSED—PETITIONER

TILBIKRAM CHETRI—COMPLAINANT—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 406—Duty of prosecution to establish charge—Truth or falsehood of defence immaterial—Accused entitled to acquittal, when case for prosecution false.

Before an accused person can be convicted it is necessary that the Court should be satisfied that the charge framed against him has been established.

If in a case under section 406, Indian Penal Code, the accused is charged with being entrusted, with a certain sum of money, and the prosecution cannot prove how he came by the money, they do not establish one of the first essentials of the offence charged, that he was entrusted with that money and he is entitled to be acquitted.

If the case of the prosecution is false on the whole the accused is entitled to an acquittal whether his defence be true or false.

Syed Mohammad Saadulla, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMEMT.—This Rule is directed against an order convicting the petitioner of an offence punishable under section 406, Indian Penal Code, and sentencing him to six months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of 100 rupees or in default two months' further rigorous imprisonment.

On the findings arrived at by the lower Court this conviction cannot be upheld. The case appears to be one in which, as stated by the learned Additional Sessions Judge, both parties have adduced false or partly false evidence. But before the petitioner can be convicted it is necessary that the Court should be satisfied that the charge framed against him has been established. The charge as finally framed was that, on the 8th December 1919, being entrusted with certain property Rs. 666 belonging to the complainant he has committed criminal breach of trust. This sum of 666 rupees was money paid for 9 maunds of ghee supplied to a certain buyer. But it is found by the lower Appellate Court that it has not been proved beyond reasonable doubt how the petitioner came by the money. If the prosecution could not prove how the petitioner came by the money they did not establish one of the first essentials of the offence charged, that he was entrusted with that money. It appears that both the Court of first instance and the Appellate Court, although they did not believe the case for the prosecution, have convicted the petitioner because he has set up a false defence. If the case of the prosecution is false on the whole the accused is entitled to an acquittal whether his defence be true or false.

We make this Rule absolute and direct that the petitioner be acquitted and the fine if paid be refunded. The petitioner's bail-bond will now be discharged.

EMPEROR, ON THE COMPLAINT OF SANTOSH KUMAR DUTT—COMPLAINANT—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 420—Sharp practice—Fraud.

The accused resorted to a trick whereby he obtained the possession and use of the complainant's monies and to the injury of the complainant secured for himself the position of advantage properly belonging to the complainant:

Held, that sharp practice of this sort constituted fraud and made the accused liable to conviction under section 420 of the Indian Penal Code. [p. 1006; col 1; p. 1008, col 2.]

Babu Manmatha Nath Mukherjee, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

TEUNON, J.—This case arises out of certain transactions in shares,

The complainant is a clerk in the Presidency Commissioner's office, while accused is a share broker, though not a member of the Stock and Share Association.

On the 25th of May last, there were, it is not disputed, two contracts between the parties, one for the sale by complainant of 100 Ghusick and Muslea at Rs. 25 8, and one for the purchase by complainant of 200 Bridge and Bolts. The case for the complainant is that the contract regarding Bridge and Bolts was that the price was Rs. 14 4, while the case for the appellant now is that to Rs. 14 4 should be added the paid up capital per share, namely, Rs. 7-8 or Rs. 21 12 in all.

In fact, later on in the day the accused bought 200 Bridge and Bolts from one Sham Kishore Khanan at Rs. 12 10 'premium' that is, therefore, at Rs. 20-2.

The further case for the complainant was that on the 25th neither he nor the accused knew that Bridge and Bolts were only partly paid up; that when the accused discovered his mistake, the contract was cancelled by mutual consent. On the other hand the accused, says that complainant refused to take delivery of the Bridge and Bolts because of the fall in price.

It is not necessary for me in the present case definitely to find whether in fact the contract was cancelled as alleged by the complainant. If it were not cancelled there remained a contract about the terms of which the parties were not agreed. The complainant's understanding of the contract is supported by the Chit Exhibit 2, and the contract itself Exhibit 3, also by the quotations in the Exchange Gazette (Exhibits H and B) while the Chit (Exhibit F) now produced by the appellant as that obtained from the complainant when the contract Exhibit 3 was delivered, is denied by the complainant, and when compared with other documents, e.g., Exhibit 2 written and signed by the complainant does not appear in my judgment to be genuine. Having regard to Exhibits 2 and 3 I see no improbability in the cancellation of this contract. But if there were no cancellation, there then remained a disputed contract which neither party could enforce otherwise than by litigation.

Instead of seeking his remedy in the Court, the appellant had recourse to a trick. On the 31st of May he induced the complainant to hand over to him the scrip for the 100 Ghusick and Musleas on the promise that he would forthwith bring to the complainant the proceeds of these shares (Rs. 2,550 less Rs. 15, the price of stamps, net Rs. 2,535) in cash. That promise he has never fulfilled and from his conduct as set out in his Pleader's letter of the said 31st of May, (Exhibit G) he never intended to fulfil. That the promise or representation was as stated by the complainant, is placed beyond all doubt by Exhibit 1.

On the 31st of May the appellant did not bring the cash to the complainant. On the contrary, by Exhibit G he proposes to credit the amount against the sum due to him according to himself over the Bridge and Bolts, and later by Exhibit K of 2nd of June, he tenders the amount less the loss substained by him over Bridge and Bolts. Neither of these courses is a fulfilment of the promise or respresentation on the faith of which on the 31st of May the complainant handed over to the appellant the Muslea scrip.

But it is said that the trick resorted to does not amount to fraud inasmuch as the sum claimed by the appellant was in fact due to him on the Bridge and Bolts contract. But the complainant denied and still denies any liability over the Bridge and Bolts contract. In the absence of agreement or arbitration, the complainant's liability, if any, to the appellant, can be ascertained only by litigation. By the trick resorted to, the appellant, while his dispute with the complainant still remained unsettled, obtained the possession and use of the complainant's monies and to the injury of the complainant secured for himself the position of advantage properly belonging to the complainant.

Sharp practise of this sort, in my judgment, constitutes fraud and this appeal will, therefore, be dismissed.

GHOSE, J.—The accused in this case, Aswini Kumar Chatterjee, who carries on business as a share and stock broker in Calcutta was charged before the Third Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta with having on or about the 31 st day of May 1920, cheated one Santosh Kumar Dutt, in respect of 100 Ghusick Muslea Coal shares valued at Rs. 2,535 by falsely representing to him that the accused would pay cash for the same which he never did and thereby having committed an offence punishable under section 420 of the Indian Penal Code. He was convicted on the 3rd September last by the learned Magistrate under the above section and sentenced to be detained till the rising of the Court on that date and to pay a fine of Rs. 800 and in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for a period of six months. The learned Magistrate directed that out of the fine, when realised, a sum of Rs. 650 should be paid to the complainant as compensation.

The facts appearing on the record, in chronological order, are as follows: On the 25th May 1920, the complainant, one Santosh Kumar Dutt, agreed to sell to the accused 100 shares in Ghusick Muslea Coal Company Ltd., of which he was the holder, at Rs. 25 8 per share. On the same date and at the same time he agreed to purchase from the accused 200 shares in the Bengal Bridge and Bolts Limited at Rs. 14 4 per share. Two memoranda, or slips as they are called, evidencing the contracts in question were exchanged between the parties on or about the 25th May. These are Exhibits 2 & E. The contracts in respect of the said two transactions are contained in one document, viz., Exhibit 3. The parties agreed that the date of delivery and payment of cash under both the above contracts should be the 28th May. At the time when Exhibit 3 was handed over to the complainant, a receipt for the same was, it is alleged, taken from him by the accused. This receipt, the genuineness of which is in question, is Exhibit F. The complainant alleges that the accused had made a mistake about the rate in respect of the shares in the Bengal Bridge and Bolts Limited, and that the correct rate was Rs. 14-4 on account of premium plus Rs. 7-8 on account of paid-up capital per share, and that on the accused discovering or admitting his mistake on or about the 25th May, the contract in respect of these shares was at the request of the accused cancelled. The complainant further alleges that he noted the fact of such cancellation on the back of Exhibit 3, on the 29th May in these words "cancelled as requested by A. K. Chatterjee." The complainant goes on to add that on the 31st May, the accused obtained from him 100 shares in the Ghusick Muslea Coal Company Limited being Nos. 128101 to 128200 and a blank transfer deed on the representation that he would bring Rs. 2,535 being the price of the shares in cash within a quarter of an hour, but that instead of bringing cash the accused caused a letter to be written to the complainant by his Pleader on the same date asking the complainant to take delivery of the 200 shares in the Bengal Bridge and Bolts Limited after paying the difference between the price of the latter (Rs. 4,350) and the price of the shares in the Ghusick Muslea Coal Company Limited which the accused had obtained from the complainant and stating that, in default of compliance, the accused would re-sell the said shares in the Bengal Bridge and Bolts Limited, at the complainant's risk and on his account and would hold him responsible for all losses. The letter referred to above is Exhibit G. It was immediately replied to by the complainant's Pleader (see Exhibit 4) and in it the complainant emphatically denied having entered into any contract with the accused for the purchase of 200 shares in Bengal Bridge and Bolts Limited at the price quoted in Exhibit G, but stated that he had contracted with the accused for the purchase of Bengal Bridge and Bolts shares at Rs. 14 4, per share clear or for Rs. 2,850 in all. The complainant went on to add that he had sold through the accused as self for principal 100 shares in the Ghusick Muslea Coal Company Limited at Rs. 25-8, per share clear and had handed over the shares Nos. 128101 to 128200 with the blank transfer deed and a bill for Rs. 2,535 after deducting the charges for stamps. The complainant stated that if the accused failed to pay the amount of the bill or to return the shares to him, he would forthwith take criminal proceedings against the accused for breach of trust. The accused failed to comply with the complainant's request and on the 2nd June the present complaint was laid before the Chief Presidency Magistrate.

The case for the defence was that Exhibit F was a genuine document, it being stated therein that Rs. 7-8 was the paid up capital in respect of each share in the Bengal Bridge and Bolts Limited; that it was well-known to the complainant that the paid-up capital per share plus the premium or less the discount had always to be paid when shares were purchased; that it was wholly untrue that there had been any cancellation in respect of the contract relating to the shares in question or that the accused had requested the complainant to cancel the said contract; that on the 28th May which was the due date, the accused called upon the complainant to perform the two contracts referred to above but the latter made excuses and put off the performance of the contracts till the 31st May; that on the last mentioned date, the accused obtained delivery of the shares in the Ghusick Muslea Coal Company Limited, from the complainant; that he pressed the complainant at the same time to pay for and take delivery of the shares in the Bengal Bridge and Bolts Limited, but that the price of the latter shares having meanwhile gone down, the complainant wanted to back out of the transaction relating to the shares in the Bengal Bridge and Bolts Limited; that on the 31st May, the accused addressed to the complainant a letter through his Pleader being Exhibit G; that as the complainant did not perform the contract in respect of the Bengal Bridge and Bolts shares and as the price thereof was going down, the accused after due notice to the complainant sold the last mentioned shares and thereby incurred a loss of Rs. 650; that on the 2nd June 1920 the accused forwarded a cheque to the complainant for a sum of Rs. 1,885 being the difference between the price of the Ghusick Muslea shares (Rs. 2 535) and the loss on the Bengal Bridge and Blots shares, and that, having regard to the fact that the accused had himself purchased the Bengal Bridge and Bolts shares at Rs. 12-10, plus Rs. 7-8 per share, it was ridiculous to suggest that the accused had offered to sell the same share at Rs. 14-4 inclusive of the paid-up capital per share.

The learned Magistrate has found that the accused made a mistake about the rate in respect of the Bengal Bridge and Bolts shares; that on the complainant's attention being drawn to the matter he refused to perform the contract in respect of these shares, and that the contract was thereupon cancelled; that the transaction in respect of the Ghusick shares was separate and distinct from Muslea the transaction in respect of the Bengal Bridge and Bolts shares; that the accused had no right to detain the sale-proceeds of the Ghusick Muslea shares and set off the loss in respect of the Bengal Bridge and Bolts shares against the same, and that he dishonestly made the complainant deliver the Ghusick Muslea shares to him.

Of course, if the finding of the learned Magistrate about the cancellation of the contract relating to the Bengal Bridge and Bolts shares is correct, then the accused was clearly guilty of an offence punishable under section 420, Indian Penal Code, and nothing more need be said about the the matter. I do not think this finding is correct. In the first place, it is noteworthy that the complainant does not mention anything about the cancellation of the contract in question either in his petition of complaint before the Magistrate or in his Pleader's letter Exhibit H. If there had been such a cancellation as suggested by the complainant, it is reasonable to assume that the complainant would have put the fact on record in some communication or other addressed to the accused. There was no such communication. At any rate, seeing that he was alive to the necessity of there being some record of the cancellation one would have expected that the complainant would have got the accused to agree to some such endorsement as appears on the back of Exhibit 3, if his story was true. This was specially important from the complainant's point of view, namely that the rate mentioned in respect of the Bengal Bridge and Bolts shares was an inclusive rate and that the word 'clear' in Exhibits 2 & E did not mean clear of brokerage as contended for on behalf of the accused. In passing, it may be noticed that the word 'clear' does not appear in Exhibit 3. But there was indeed no reason whatsoever why the accused should request the complainant to cancel the contract in question. The accused, it is true, denied that Exhibit F bore his signature. Exhibit F is a receipt, purported to have been granted by the complainant at the time when Exhibit 3 was delivered to him and it contained a reference to the fact that the paid-up capital per share in the Bengal Bridge and Bolts Limited was Rs. 7-8. The complainant admitted in his cross examination that the accused had obtained a chit from him when he delivered the contract to him; but leaving aside the question whether that chit was Exhibit F or not, there cannot be any doubt on the admission of the complainant in his cross-examination that it was well-known to him that the paid up amount of a share plus the premium or less the discount had to be paid when shares were purchased. No doubt, it may be said that the complainant did not know that the shares in question had been partly paid up, but, however that may be, I find it difficult to accept as true the complainant's account of the cancellation of the contract in question; in my opinion, the inference may not unreasonably be drawn that the complainant having found out that the market in respect of the Bengal Bridge and Bolts shares was against him was trying to wriggle out of the contract in respect thereof. The position, therefore, on the 31st May was this: the complainant did not want to perform the contract in respect of the Bengal Bridge and Bolts shares, while it was to the interest of the accused, as he had himself purchased the requisite number of these shares from another person on the 25th May (see Exhibit N) for the purpose of giving delivery to the complainant, that the complainant should somehow or other be made to perform the contract or in the alternative should be made to suffer the loss on these shares by reason of the market having gone down. How was this to be done? According to both parties, the contract in respect of the Ghusick Muslea shares was subsisting; but the complainant, in the events which had happened, was unwilling to part with them, except for cash. The accused, therefore, falsely represented to the complainant that he would bring cash in exchange for the Ghusick Muslea shares and thereby induced the complainant to hand over the Ghusick Muslea shares to the accused. Having got possession of these shares, the accused proceeded to dictate his terms through his Pleader to the complainant (Exhibit G). It is argued, however, on behalf of the accused that inasmuch as the complainant was bound to give delivery of the Ghusick Muslea shares, no offence had been committed by the accused in getting possession of these shares by means of a trick. I am unable to accede to this contention. The accused's proper course was to put the matter in a Court of law, but instead of doing that he had recourse to a trickery. The action of the accused was dishonest and fraudulent and, in my opinion, he was guilty of an offence punishable under section 420, Indian Penal Code. I am, therefore, of opinion that this appeal fails and should be dismissed. See Queen-Empress v. Sri Ohurn Ohungo (1).

What a party himself admits to be true may reasonably be presumed to be so and until the presumption is rebutted the fact admitted must be taken to be established. O GHULAM SARWAR KHAN v. MUHAMMAD ALI KHAN, 8 O. L. J. 609 398

Adverse possession by co-owner—Acquiescence, effect of.

Every case of an adverse possession by a co-sharer must be considered on its own facts, and the principle that the possession of one co-sharer is, in law, the possession of all, should not be pressed too far.

Where the co-owners, who are mere cousins by marriage, succeed to a certain property, and one of them occupies more than his share, under circumstances which do not suggest in any way that he is doing so on behalf of the other, or in any other way than wrongfully, it cannot be said that he does not really oust adversely the other co-sharer from the portion so occupied.

There are cases in which consent to usurpation is not inconsistent with its becoming adverse, as for instance, where a person consents to usurpation not thinking it worthwhile to interfere. A MUSTAFA KHAN v. DULARI, 3 U. P. L. R. (A.) 5 75

—— by trespasser—Land submerged during part of year—Constructive possession—Presumption.

A trespasser does not acquire any right by adverse possession in respect of a land which is subject to submergence for a part of every year. No presumption either of constructive possession on account of previous actual possession or on account of contiguity of the land with other land in actual possession of the trespasser can be made in his favour. O BACHCHA SINGH v. CHANDRES SINGH, 8 O. —— Landlord and tenant — Non-payment of rent—Abandonment of possession—Constructive possession—Trespasser—Revenue Records, entries in—Presumption.

Where a person is entered as a tenant in the Revenue Records in respect of a plot of land, the mere fact that he has not paid any rent in respect of the plot cannot clothe him with any higher position than that which is given to him by those entries. If liability for the payment of rent is fixed on such person by the entries, the non-enforcement of that liability on the part of the landlord and the non-compliance of the same obligation on the part of the tenant do not make the latter the owner of the plot in dispute.

Limitation does not continue to run against the rightful owner of land after an intruder has relinquished possession without acquiring title under the Act. Possession so abandoned leaves the rightful owner in the same position in all respects as he was before the intrusion took place. The Act applies not to want of possession by the plaintiff, but to cases where he has been out of, and another in, possession for the prescribed time.

As a general rule, possession of part is in law possession of the whole if the whole is otherwise vacant; but constructive possession of this kind can only be presumed when there is a claim based upon title. Possession by a trespasser is confined to the land actually occupied by him.

In the absence of any evidence to the contrary, the entries in the revenue papers must be deemed to be correct. O DURGA v RAM PADARATH, 8 O. L. J. 495 749

The right of an occupancy tenant was created for the first time by the provisions of section 6 of Act X of 1859 and that right was neither transferable nor heritable. Until the passing of Act XVIII of 1873 there was no rule of succession provided for occupancy holdings and succession was governed by custom which varied in different villages.

One N, an occupancy tenant, died about 1868. On his death his widow entered into possession of the occupancy holding. In 1893 the widow made a gift of the property to the defendant. The widow died in 1915 and the plaintiffs, her reversioners, sued for possession:

Held, that as the widow was permitted to continue cultivation of the holding after her husband's death, she acquired in her own right after twelve years the right of an occupancy tenant and that, consequently, succession was governed by section 22 of the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901, and that as the plaintiffs did not share in the cultivation at the widow's death they could not succeed. A MANPAL SINGH v. RAJ PARTAB SINGH, 20 A. In case of a rent-free grant of land in favour of an idol worshipped in a shrine the particular priest who for the time being may be in charge as manager of the affairs of the temple in question, or of the worship of the idol as conducted therein cannot be regarded as himself the grantee within the meaning of section 158 of Act II of 1901, nor can any priest who from time to time may succeed to the office be treated as a successor to the original grantee within the meaning of that section.

In order to maintain in second appeal or in a Letters Patent appeal in a rent-free grant case that the use of the word "shankalap" as a description of the nature of the grant involves a transfer of proprietary rights in the land it is incumbent on the person raising it to plead, and to show from the record, that documentary evidence establishing his contention of fact has either been disregarded by the Court of first appeal or misinterpreted. A MATHURA PRASAD v. RAMESHWAR, 19 A. One of two rival Zemindars fraudulently entered the other Zemindar's name as sub-tenant, obtained an ex parte decree for arrears of rent from the Revenue Court and then sued for ejectment. The other Zemindar raised the defence of proprietary possession, and was thereupon directed to bring his suit within three months in a Civil Court. In the Civil Court, he asked for a declaration of his proprietary title. It was alleged that the suit was barred by res judicata and also by limitation as it was brought more than six years after the entry of the plaintiff's name as sub-tenant:

Held, that the suit was not barred by res judicata as the Revenue Court was not competent to decide this case, that a fresh cause of action arose when the decree for rent was obtained and that that decree was not binding on the Civil Court and could not operate as estoppel against the plaintiff.

A claim for a declaration of title by an alleged owner cannot be brought within section 167 of Agra Tenancy Act.

Agreement, terms of—Loan—Document inadmissible in evidence—Lender, when can fall back and sue upon loan itself—Consideration, failure of—Equity.

Where the terms of an agreement can be distinguished from the fact that an agreement was come to and such fact is itself also in issue, the Court can allow the fact to be proved and even the document to be used in evidence for collateral purposes.

The question whether a loan was given and taken can in certain cases, such as those of collateral securities, be distinguished from the question of the terms of the loan and of its re-payment. Where it can be so distinguished, if the document embodying the terms is inadmissible, the lender may fall back and sue upon the loan itself and prove it by other evidence, as an implied contract to re-pay money arises from the fact that the money was lent.

The basis of such an action is not the document, but the doctrine of equity that a person who has received a sum of money from another for a consideration which has wholly failed should return the money to the payer.

The defendant asked the plaintiff to lend him Rs. 400. The latter agreed to pay Rs. 200 at once and half later. On payment of Rs. 200 the defendant executed in favour of the plaintiff a document for Rs. 400 and stamped it with one anna stamp. Out of the remaining Rs. 200, Rs. 30 only were paid to the defendant some days later. The plaintiff sued the defendant for recovery of Rs. 230 which he had lent. The document was held to be inadmissible in evidence for want of stamp:

Held, that, as the giving of the loan of Rs. 230 and the agreement to lend Rs 400 and its terms as embodied in the inadmissible document were distinguishable, notwithstanding the fact that the document itself was excluded from evidence and could not be acted upon, the plaintiff was entitled to fall back upon the sums actually lent to the defendant and to sue and to prove that they were lent and obtain a decree in respect of them. S NARAINDAS v JASSOMAL, 15 S. Alluvial land—Suit for possession—Re-formation in situ of permanently settled estate—Thak and Survey maps, state of things described in, evidentiary value of—Burden of proof—Quinquennial papers, Hakikat Chauhaddi papers and hand-sketches drawn on their basis, evidentiary value of—Miscalculation or misstatement in returns, if can defeat title to estate—Adverse possession of waste lands, nature of—Dispossession of trespasser by vis major of floods—Constructive possession of true owner—Revenue sale—Adverse possession against purchaser, when commences to run—Suit to recover possession by plaintiff who became entitled to possession on determination of limited estate—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 140, 142, 144.

It cannot be presumed as a matter of law that the state of things described in the thak and Survey maps existed at the time of the Permanent Settlement. The question, what lands were included in the Permanent Settlement, is a question of fact and not of law which may or may not be satisfactorily proved by subsequent Survey maps. The onus of proving that any particular lands were included in the Permanent Settlement of 1793 is on those who affirm that such was the case, and the burden of proof is not necessarily shifted by the production of the thak and Survey maps showing that specific lands are included in a particular estate. The thak and Survey maps are valuable evidence of the state of things at the time they were made, but it does not follow that they show conclusively what was the state of things at the time of the Permanent Settlement.

The quinquennial papers prepared by the Revenue Authorities under the provisions of Regulation XLVIII of 1793 are admissible in evidence.

The Hakikat Chauhaddi Bandi papers are boundary papers prepared by the owners of the estates and submitted to Government.

Reliance can be placed upon hand-sketches drawn by the parties on the basis of the information derivable from the quinquennial papers and the Hakikat Chauhaddi papers.

Importance cannot be attached to the areas of the Mouzas as mentioned in the quinquennial papers. If, in fact, the boundaries are proved to include an area far greater than that referred to in the returns, such miscalculation or misrepresentation cannot defeat the title to the estate.

The nature of the possession required in an adverse possessor of waste lands sufficient to take the title out of the true owner, is that it must be adequate in continuity, in publicity, and in extent of area.

No rational distinction can be drawn between cases where re-formed land is after a few years again submerged by the flood for a time, and cases where the re-flooding is seasonal and occurs for several months in each year.

On the dispossession of a trespasser by the vis major of floods, the constructive possession of the land is in the true owner, in other words, the land after submersion becomes derelict, and so long as it remains submerged, no title can be made against the true owner

In a sale held under Act XI of 1859 what is sold is not the interest of the defaulting owner which is determined on the failure to pay the Government assessment but the interest of the Alluvial land – concld.

Crown subject to the payment of the Government assessment, and, therefore, the period of limitation for adverse possession against the purchaser at such a sale only commences to run from the date of the sale.

A suit to recover possession of a land from a trespasser by the plaintiff who became entitled to possession only after the determination of a limited or particular estate held by another, whatever its precise nature might have been, and when that estate did not fall into possession until the death of the holder of the limited estate, is governed by Article 140 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. In such a case Article 142 cannot apply where the plaintiff was never in fact dispossessed; nor can Article 144 apply, as possession of a trespasser cannot be deemed adverse against a person not entitled to be in possession at that time. C SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. WAZED ALI KHAN PANE, 34 C. Under a judgment passed in a suit for partition, one M. obtained certain immoveable properties in his share and was held entitled to certain sums of money (as owelty money from certain persons. Before the decree was drawn up and signed a creditor of M. applied for attachment of the money portion of the decree, and on the day following the Court sent the notice of attachment attaching the decree. Objection was made (1) that there was no decree which could have been attached, and (2) that at any rate the attachment being of the decree (i.e, the whole decree) was bad as the decree related in part to immoveable property, the procedure prescribed for attachment of which had not been followed:

Held, (1) that there was a decree in favour of M. in the ordering portion of the judgment though the formal decree was not drawn up and signed and (2) that the notice, in so far as it directed the attachment of the other portion of the decree no doubt must be treated as ineffectual, but that did not affect the attachment of the decree in so far as it awarded a certain sum of money. The predecessor-in-interest of plaintiffs created a permanent tenure at a fixed jama in favour of the predecessors-in-title of the defendants in the year 1860. Some of the lands were resumed by Government and afterwards settled with the plaintiffs in 1900 as dearah lands. The Government revenue was separately fixed for the lands and the rent payable by the tenants was also fixed. In 1914, there was a fresh Settlement by Government and the Settlement Authorities assessed higher revenue by the plaintiffs and higher rent payable by the tenure-holders under the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs brought a suit for recovery of the rent fixed in the Settlement proceedings. The defence was that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any additional rent over and above the rent payable under the kabuliyat of 1860:

Held, that the intention of the parties being that the lease should comprise all the lands within it and the rent having been settled at a lump sum for all the lands leased out, it could not be said that the tenants would have no right to the lands even if they were settled with the Zemindar after resumption by Government, and that, therefore, the tenants were entitled to hold the lands as part of the taluk at the same rent under the original kabuliyat.

Section 192 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not, either expressly or impliedly, give power to a Revenue Officer to fix a rent so as to affect contracts entered into before the passing of the Act. Berar Inam Rules 1859, class III, r. V—Inam Estates in Berar—Devolution—Lineal descendants—Descendants through females included—Muhammadan Law—"Farzandan," meaning of.

The devolution and incidents of an Inam Estate in Berar are regulated by the Berar Inam Rules of 1859, subject to the Sanad or certificate or other document evidencing the special terms of the grant in the particular case.

The Berar Inam Rules were made for the settlement of Jagir and Inam claims throughout Berar, both by declaring the grants the Government of India was prepared to recognize, and treating each recognition as a fresh starting point to provide conditions for its future enjoyment and devolution.

In the Province of Berar, an old "Sanad" from the Muhammadan Government of the time granting a personal or subsistence grant or Inam is not binding on the Government of India and the real starting point of the grant, so far as the Government of India is concerned, is the time when the grant is first recognised by it under the Berar Inam Rules of 1859.

Where a maintenance grant given by a Muhammadan Ruler in perpetuity to the grantee and his children (bafarzandan) was recognised by the Government of India without using the word "farzand" or the expression "lineal descendants" in the certificate of recognition:

Held, (1) that the condition "bafarzandan" mentioned in the original grant was not continued by necessary implication when the grant was recognised;

(2) that the recognition intended merely to continue the grant and not its original conditions;

(3 that under the circumstances the devolution should be governed by the personal law of the parties subject to any limitation imposed by the Inam Rules;

(4) that the case fell under class III of the Berar Inam Rules and was governed by rule V in which the expression "direct lineal heirs" was not intended to be used in the restricted sense in which the word "farzandan" is used in Muhammadan Law and that consequently a daughter's son was a lineal descendant.

Obiter.—The term "farzandan" according to the interpretation put upon it by the writers on Muhammadan Law means offspring or lineal descendants and includes daughters but not the children of daughters, inasmuch as lineage is derived from the father and not from the mother. N CHOTU v. AKABAR ALI 72

The Malkapur Municipality in Berar cannot, under Notification No. 64?, dated 16th October 1906, of the Local Government, assess professional income derived by the assessee outside its Municipal limits, unless such income is brought in and mixed with the income made within the Municipality

The jurisdiction of a Court depends upon the allegations in the plaint and not upon those which may ultimately be found true. The allegations may, after the trial of the suit, be held to be unfounded, in that case the suit would be dismissed, not because the Court had no jurisdiction, but because the allegations on which it was based were found to be untrue. At the same time, a Court would not have jurisdiction merely upon a bare assertion in the plaint The plaint must make distinct allegation of fact or of law which may bear out the assertion. N MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, MALKAPUR v. AMRIT WAMAN DALAL 532

———, definition of—Marriage, dissolution of, suit for—Divorce, declaration of, suit for—Conjugal rights, restitution of suit for—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 23, Sch. I, Art. 120.

A cause of action includes every fact which it would be necessary to prove, if traversed, in order to enable a plaintiff to sustain his action.

In 91? defendant, husband, filed a suit against plaintiff, his wife, for restitution of conjugal rights. The plaintiff pleaded divorce and cruelty. The suit was dismissed on the ground of cruelty but no specific finding was given on the question of divorce. The plaintiff thereafter sued for a declaration that the relationship of wife and husband between the parties ceased to exist in consequence of a divorce effected by the defendant and in the alternative for a decree for dissolution of the marriage and the cause of action was stated to have arisen on the date on which the Appellate Court delivered its judgment in the previous suit. The defendant denied the alleged divorce and cruelty and pleaded limitation:

Held, that the opinions expressed in the judgments of the previous litigation as to the affirmation of cruelty and the negation of divorce could not form a cause of action for the present suit of the plaintiff, and that any admission of evidence of acts of cruelty and of divorce other than the acts and the divorce mentioned in the plaint would amount to a departure from the cause of action on which the suit was brought and that the plaintiff could not prove them.

As a suit for dissolution of marriage or for a declaration as to an accomplished divorce is essentially different in cause of action from a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, the former suit does not fall within the purview of section 23 but is governed solely by Article 120, Schedule I, of the Limitation Act. O MUHAMMAD HAMIDULLAH KHAN v. FAKHRJAHAN BEGAM, 8 O. The transfer by a tenant of an absolute occupancy holding by gift with the consent of the malguzar, even though it is a subsequent consent, is equivalent to a surrender to him by the tenant and a fresh grant by him to the donee.

In respect of surrenders, an absolute occupancy right is a tenancy and not a proprietary right.

A surrender by a widow of her tenancy rights to the malguzar is binding on the reversioners inasmuch as the limitations of her interest in the tenancy are subject to the provisions of the Tenancy Act as to surrender and alienation.

In a suit for possession, the plaintiffs having no title cannot succeed on the weakness of the defendant's title when he is in possession.

A landlord is entitled to lease a parcel of land with the condition that the lessee is to have all the rights and liabilities that an absolute tenant has and though such a lessee may not be called an absolute occupancy tenant as defined in section 59 of Act XI of 1898 or section 4 of Act I of 1920 yet his rights and liabilities and legal status would be the same whatever he is called

C. P. Tenancy Act—concld.

——— s. 95—Co-sharers—Re-distribution—Suit between tenant and former landlord—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts.

The division of khudkasht or sir among co-sharers of a village to be held in severalty is a partial private partition of the village lands and each co-sharer's separately held parcel of land is a separate patti of the village, of which he is the sole landlord, and if he leases that land to a tenant, he is still the sole landlord. But there is nothing to prevent the co-sharers having a re-distribution of the lands held in separate ownership at any time, and either khudkasht or tenancy land can always be transferred to another patti or to, what may be called, the shamilat patti. Of tenancy land so returned to the body of co-sharers they are the landlords and are ordinarily represented by the lambardar, and the co-sharer who held the land previously in separate ownership is no longer the landlord. A suit between him and the tenant in respect of that land is, therefore, not a suit between landlord and tenant as such and is cognisable by a Civil Court. N JAGANNATH v. SAHEBRAO 127

Tenancy Act, which includes enquiries under section 93 of the Act, have, by rules having the force of law, been given the powers of Civil Courts in the matter of costs and if they do not award costs, they must be held to have disallowed them and a subsequent suit for the recovery of the costs incurred in the revenue proceedings will not lie. N MOTIRAM v. HARI 67

Cess Act (IX of 1880), ss. 5, 41, Ch. IV, ss. 52, 64—Public Demands Recovery Act (I of 1895)—Sale of holding for non-payment of cess, effect of—Previous incumbrance on holding—Priority—Rent-free tenure, cess on, liability to pay, when arises—Notice under Cess Act—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 114 (e)—Presumption—Onus—Contract to pay cess not illegal—Previous decree for cess—Res judicata.

A purchaser of a holding in execution of a decree for cess purchases only the right, title and interest of the tenant; but the holding itself does not pass so as to entitle the purchaser to hold it free from encumbrance created upon it by the tenant previous to the sale and, therefore, he cannot have the encumbrance annulled nor recover possession of the holding from a purchaser of it in execution of a decree based on the encumbrance.

The payment of road cess is a liability to the Government, but the liability enforced by section 52 of the Cess Act does not in itself create any charge on any estate or tenure. So far as the liability to the Government is concerned, it is a personal one, which is enforced by the Public Demands Recovey Act and for the realization of which the right, title and interest only of the judgment-debtor passes.

In order to make cess payable under the provisions of the Cess Act with respect to rent-free lands the requirements of Chapter IV of the Act must be complied with. It is only after the publication of the extracts from the valuation roll that the liability to pay cess to the superior landlord arises in the case of a rent-free tenure. When the provisions of Chapter IV of the Cess Act are fully complied with, then a cess becomes payable under the Act and such a cess a superior landlord is entitled to realise "with the same penalty and in the same manner as if it were an arrear of rent."

No presumption of section 114, clause (e) of the Evidence Act applies with respect to the notice provided by section 52 of Cess Act and the person, who claims that a right or obligation, such as the payment of cess by a tenure-holder, has accrued, must prove that the liabilities had been incurred and the things described in the Act had been actually done. The owners of rent-free lands are not bound to pay road cess before the publication of the valuation rolls under section 52.

A previous decree for cess does not operate as res judicata, inasmuch as a cess is a recurring charge.

A contract to pay cess is not at all illegal, nor is it prohibited under the provisions of section 41 or any other provision of the Cess Act. Pat PITAMBER CHOWDHRY v. RAHMAT ALI, 3 P. L. T. 282 138

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Res judicata and estoppel, difference between—Auction-purchaser in execution of money-decree, whether representative of judgment-debtor—"Person claiming through another," meaning of—Landlord and tenant, decision between, whether res judicata in suit between landlord and auction-purchaser of tenant's rights—Transferee, title of.

There is a difference in the principle upon which the doctrines of res judicata and estoppel are based. Res judicaia in this country is founded on the principle that there should be an end to litigation as to any issue between the parties when once that issue has been directly determined between them by a Court of competent jurisdiction, and it affects not only the original parties but all others afterwards claiming under them and litigating under the same title. It bars fresh litigation at the outset. Estoppel is a rule of evidence based on the principle that a man who by his acts or statements has induced another to believe a thing to be true, should not afterwards be heard to deny the truth of that thing to the prejudice of the other who acted upon the belief so induced.

No man can transfer to another a better title than he himself possesses.

An execution-purchaser is the representative of the judgment-debtor so as to bring him within the rule of estoppel and the principle of res judicata.

A person claims through or under another when he derives his title through that other either by assignment, inheritance or succession or when he holds a subordinate title granted by the other, and except in cases specially provided for by Statute or common law, he can have no better title than the person through or under whom he claims.

Therefore a purchaser at an execution sale, who purchases the right, title and interest of a tenant judgment-debtor is a person claiming under the latter and is bound by the rule of res judicata and cannot again in a suit between himself and the landlords re-open the matters already decided between his predecessor-in-title and the landlords. Pat KALI DAYAL v. UMESH PRASAD, (1922) PAT. 33 466

The suit was dismissed. The property was sold and M. brought the present suit for a declaration that the debts were tainted with immorality and he was not liable. The first Court dismissed the suit holding that it was barred by res judicata, the lower Appellate Court held that it was not barred. On appeal of the defendant :

In view of the provisions of sections 18 and 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure, unless there has been a failure of justice, a decree of a Trial Court cannot be set aside by the Appellate Court on the ground that it is doubtful whether the subject-matter of the litigation lay within the territorial jurisdiction of the Trial Court.

A person can sue for declaration of title to, and possession with mesne profits of, a land re-formed in situ without, in the first instance, obtaining a settlement of the same from the Revenue Authorities

When the object of a suit is not to set aside an award made by the Revenue Authorities but to recover possession of a land, section 45 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act has no application.

Where the title of a plaintiff seeking for possession and partition of a property has not been made precarious, by virtue of its periodical Settlement for the assessment of revenue in favour of the defendant, there is nothing to prevent a Civil Court from effecting its partition. C MIDNAPUR ZEMINDARY CO., LD v. NARESH NARAIN ROY, 33 C. ——— s. 20—Jurisdiction—Firm carrying on business in different places—Identity, determination of—Procedure—"Carrying on business," explanation and meaning of—Winding up and carrying on business—Stage of insolvency—Offence against insolvency law.

In the case of firms carrying on business in different parts of the country or of the Province, sometimes constituted of the same people, sometimes constituted with the omission of one person who has no interest in a branch business in one of the towns, or with the addition of a new person who has an interest confined only to that branch business, a Court should analyse the facts as thoroughly as it can, in order to determine whether the firms or persons so carrying on business are really the same legal entity or person in each place.

A firm, without being a branch in the sense that it is subordinate to and under the control of a firm in a different town and compelled to render an account to the latter, might still be, in substance, the same business so as to make it carry on business in its own place, if it is transacting the business of the other firm in its own place as agent for that firm, purchasing and selling goods and obtaining orders, forwarding or receiving orders to and from that firm and merely remunerating itself by being allowed to make a definite profit out of certain transactions or a limited profit out of all transactions.

"Carrying on business" is used in section 20, Civil Procedure Code, as distinct from personally working; of course a man personally working in a particular place is carrying on business, but a man may carry on business, and thousands of people do, in a place where he does no personal work of any kind, and a firm may be carrying on business at a particular place either through an agency or through a manager or by its servants without ever having left its own town. It means, in the section, having an interest in the business transactions at the particular place : a voice in what is done; a share in the gain or loss, as the case may be, and some control, if not over the actual method of working, at any rate, upon the existence of the business. It necessarily means making provision for the future.

Winding up or disposing of goods with a view to winding up is just as much carrying on business while it lasts, as purchasing goods or investing capital in carrying on business.

When a man reaches the stage of insolvency, he commits an offence against the insolvency laws unless he winds up his affairs, that is to say, he goes on incurring liabilities and incurring losses when he is unable to pay his debts. He still carries on business if with a view to winding up his business and preventing any further losses and committing a breach of the insolvency laws, he proceeds to dispose of his stock. A KIRPA RAM SITA RAM v. MANGAL SEN BISHEN MAL, 3 U. ——— s. 20—"Reside," meaning of—Animo residendi.

The term "residence" may be used in two senses, the one denoting the personal habitual habitation, the other the constructive, technical and legal habitation. When a person has a fixed abode where he dwells with his family, there can be no doubt as to the place where he resides : the places of his personal and legal residence are the same. When, on the other hand, a person has no permanent habitation or family, but dwells in different places as he happens to find employment, there can equally be no doubt as to the place where he resides : he must be considered as residing where he actually or personally resides. But some individuals have permanent habitations, where their families constantly dwell, yet they pass great portions of their time in other places ; such persons have a legal residence with their families and a personal residence in the other places, and the word "reside" may, with respect to such persons, be used in relation to either their personal or their legal residence.

The word "residence" should not be construed narrowly as having always a reference to animo residendi. In the case of a lunatic it should be interpreted as implying not intelligent residence, but bodily presence C ANILABALA CHOWDHURANI v. DHIRENDRA NATH, 25 C. W. N. 178; 48 C. 577 57

Held, (1) that the contract was formed at Rawalpindi ;

(2) that the breach, if any, had taken place at Murree ;

(3) that the mere posting of the cheque by the plaintiff from Sialkot did not have the effect of completing the contract at Sialkote ;

(4) that it was doubtful whether the mere leasing of house property at Sialkot by the defendants through an agent amounted to carrying on business at Sialkot within the meaning of section 20 of the Civil Procedure Code ;

(5) that, therefore, the Sialkot Courts had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, but that as there was no failure of justice in consequence of the suit having been tried at Sialkot, objection as to place of suing could not be sustained by High Court by reason of section 21 of the Civil Procedure Code. L SOHAN SINGH v. RIDDICK 865

An applicant for transfer of a case from one Court to another must make out a strong case of the balance of convenience.

In such a case the convenience of the parties in the conduct of litigation is certainly a relevant consideration and it is rather the basis of nearly all statutory jurisdiction on the civil side.

A plaintiff has a prima facie right to decide the place of trial, but the defendant may show exceptional circumstances for trial of the case at another jurisdiction.

A suit for cancellation of a deed of gift executed in the Central Provinces by a deceased person while in the state of ill-health under undue influence was transferred from a Court within the jurisdiction of the Allahabad High Court where the parties resided to the Court in the Central Provinces on the ground that the balance of convenience was in favour of the latter Court inasmuch as all available witnesses resided at the place in the Central Provinces. A INAYATULLA KHAN v. NISAR AHMAD KHAN, 20 A. Where execution of a decree has been obstructed by fraud on the part of the judgment-debtor for more than 12 years from the date on which it was passed, the decree-holder is entitled to further opportunity under section 48, clause 2 (a) of the Civil Procedure Code.

Per Walsh, J.—The word "fraud" dealt with by section 48 (2) (a) of the Civil Procedure Code is such as prevents the execution of a decree within twelve years, and Judges ought to take a broad view of conduct deliberately adopted by judgment-debtors with a view to defeating and delaying the just payment of their debts by frivolous and futile objections, which are dishonest upon the face of them. Where a Statute creates an obligation and provides for enforcing its performance in a particular manner, performance must be obtained in that manner and in no other.

Section 73 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code contains no indication that a sale by virtue of which assets have been made available for rateable distribution can be attacked under it. The cause of action recognised by that section arises out of a wrong distribution of assets and is entirely without relation to the manner in which those assets were obtained.

The right of an auction-purchaser to obtain a refund of the purchase-money when the judgment-debtor is found to be without a saleable interest, is entirely the creature of rules 91 and 93 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code, the result being that without getting the sale set aside through the Court and by the method prescribed by the Code, the auction purchaser has no remedy. The general principle of caveat emptor affects the purchaser unless he chooses to adopt the remedy given to him by the Statute.

A suit by an auction-purchaser for recovery of the purchase-money from persons to whom it has been paid, on the ground that the judgment-debtor does not possess a saleable interest in the property sold, is not maintainable. N LAKHMICHAND v. CHATURBHUJ 230

The expression "any matter in difference between them" in paragraph 1, Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, should not be given an extended meaning so as to include matters in dispute between the parties not included in the suit.

A reference to arbitration on such matters is not a valid reference and the award on such a reference can neither be treated as a valid award, nor a lawful compromise of the suit claim under Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code

An amendment of pleadings is allowed subject to three general conditions, (1) bona fides on the part of the applicant, (2) possibility of amendment without such prejudice to the other party as cannot be compensated by costs and (3 the amendment is not such as to turn a suit of one character into a suit of another character.

In a suit for damages and permanent injunction, the plaintiffs in their plaint asserted that they had title to and possession of the land in suit; the defendants denied the plaintiffs' title, and pointed out that the suit could not be maintained as framed, as the plaintiffs were out of possession. Then the plaintiffs applied for amendment of the plaint and the only amendment which they wanted was that there should be a prayer for declaration of their title. That was disallowed by the Court of first instance. The Appellate Court by a remand order directed an amendment in terms of the plaintiffs' petition. After the case went back on remand, the plaint was amended with a prayer for declaration of the plaintiffs' title. Thereafter the plaintiffs put in another petition for further amendment, of the plaint with a prayer for recovery of possession. This was objected to by the defendants, on the ground that the amendment was illegal and altered the character of the suit. This objection was, however, disallowed and the case was tried out, with the result that the suit was decreed by the First Court and the decree was affirmed on appeal. On second appeal by the defendants:

Held, (1) that in all the circumstances of the case the Court ought not to have allowed the second amendment.

(2) that although the defendants not having appealed against the order of remand directing amendment, were debarred by the provisions of section 105, sub-section (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure, from disputing the correctness of the order, they were not precluded by the provisions of that section from showing that they had been prejudiced by the further amendment made in the course of the re-trial. C GYANENDRA NATH v. PORESH NATH PAL, 26 C. ——— ss. 115, 151, O. XXI, r. 1, O. XXIII, r. 1—Execution petition, withdrawal of—Sale of property notwithstanding withdrawal—Jurisdiction—Appeal—Inherent power of Court.

A decree-holder applied for execution of his decree by sale of the judgment-debtor's property, but on the date fixed for the sale applied to the Court to dismiss the execution case. The Court rejected the second application and proceeded to sell the properties. Against the order rejecting the application an appeal was made to the District Judge who set aside the order of rejection. On an appeal to the High Court, a single Judge set aside the order of the District Judge as being without jurisdiction. On a Letters Patent Appeal:

Held, that no appeal lay to the District Judge against the order of the Munsif rejecting the application of the decree-holder and ordering the sale of the property in question.

Held, also, that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to reject the prayer of the decree-holder to dismiss his petition for execution, inasmuch as there was nothing to prevent a decree-holder from withdrawing his execution and getting it dismissed, if he did not want to claim any relief in respect of the execution.

Held, further, that under such circumstances the High Court had power under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside the order of the Munsif, which was without jurisdiction. Pat RAM PRASAD RAI v. MAHEN KANT 122

A judgment-debtor who was arrested in an execution of decree was released from custody on a surety undertaking to produce him whenever the Court required and the surety gave a surety-bond to the Court binding himself, on failure to produce the judgment-debtor whenever required, to pay the amount himself. One month's time was given to the surety for the payment of the money and he was directed to produce the judgment-debtor on the expiry of the month. A criminal charge of embezzlement against the judgment-debtor was pending at the instance of the decree-holder at the time the surety-bond was given and this very surety went bail for the judgment-debtor in the Criminal Court. On the date on which the judgment-debtor was to be produced in Court, he was sentenced to imprisonment and thereupon the surety applied in Court for his discharge but no order was passed. On decree-holder's application for process against the surety:

Held, that the surety was not discharged from his obligations inasmuch as it could not be said that the surety could not have contemplated the possibility, or even the probability, of the judgment-debtor being in jail within a month of his executing the surety-bond when he knew that at that time criminal proceedings were going on against the judgment-debtor and that, therefore, execution could issue against the surety. A RAMESHWAR SINGH v. SRI LAL, 19 A. There is a distinction between applications to sue as a pauper, and applications to appeal as such. In the former the plaint is an integral portion of, the application; in the latter the memorandum of appeal is a separate document.

Appellant applied for leave to appeal as pauper, and along with his application filed a memorandum of appeal as required by Order XLIV, rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code. The application was made within the period of limitation allowed for an appeal. Eventually, long after limitation had expired, the application was dismissed and the Court made an order requiring the appellant to pay in Court-fees by a certain date, which was done. At the hearing it was objected that the appeal was barred by time:

Held, (1) that the dismissal of the application for leave to appeal as a pauper did not involve a dismissal of the appeal;

(2) that the order of the Court directing payment of Court-fees was made under section 149 of the Civil Procedure Code;

The provisions of Order I, rule 8, of the Civil Procedure Code as to the issue of notice in a suit brought in a representative capacity are peremptory and a Court is bound to issue notice as required by the rule. If it omits to issue notice, it commits an irregularity and a grave irregularity, and the proper course to follow for the Appellate Court in such a case is to send back the case to the Court of first instance, with directions to take up the case at the stage at which it ought to have issued notice and to issue notice and then proceed with the suit and re-try it.

No Court should overlook or omit to carry out what the law requires.

A simple mortgage-deed, containing no express covenant for the payment of the principal and interest, provided that the interest would be paid monthly and if no interest was paid for six months the creditor would be entitled to sue for interest alone or for both principal and interest. No interest was paid and after three years—the expiry of the period of the mortgage—the mortgagee, relying on the cause of action arising on the non-payment of interest for six months, sued for interest alone and got a decree. In an order for the production or for the inspection of books and documents, a general description would be sufficient so long as that description would suffice for the identification of the document or book sought to be produced or inspected.

The penalty provided in rule 21 of Order XI of the Civil Procedure Code should only be imposed in extreme cases and as a last resort.

When books relating to a partnership, the business of which is carried on at several places, are ordered to be produced, it is an extreme measure to penalise the failure of the defendant to produce one out of many books by striking his defence out.

The word "Court" in Order XXII, rule 5, Civil Procedure Code, means 'the Court before which the question arises,' that is to say, the Trial Court if the question arises at the trial stage and the Appellate Court if the question arises when the Appellate Court is in seisin of the case.

Civil Procedure Code—1908—contd.

Therefore, where there is any dispute as to the legal representative of a deceased party to an appeal the Appellate Court should determine the question itself and should not ask the Trial Court to report upon and determine the question but may direct the Trial Court to take evidence upon the question as to who is the proper legal representative of the deceased party and return the evidence to the Appellate Court. Pat CHANDMANI v. KARTICK SINGH 131

——— O. XXXII, r. 4 (3)—Guardian ad litem—Appointment without consent—Certificated guardian—Presumption as to consent—Suit against minor unrepresented by guardian—Decree—Jurisdiction.

In a suit against a minor a Court is not entitled to presume that a certificated guardian (of the person and property of the minor under Act VIII of 1890 will consent to be appointed guardian for the suit, and should not, without his consent to such an appointment, in contravention of the express direction of sub-rule 3 of rule 4 of Order XXXII of the Civil Procedure Code, appoint him as guardian for the suit.

The provision as to the consent of the person proposed to be appointed guardian for the suit is mandatory and imperative.

Therefore when, a person has been appointed guardian without his consent, the infant is not represented and a decree made in a suit so constituted has no binding effect upon him.

When a Court proceeds to make a decree against an infant who is not properly represented by a guardian, as contemplated by the Code of Civil Procedure, the Court acts without jurisdiction, inasmuch as a decree is made against a person who is in essence not before the Court.

In a suit notices were duly served upon a minor defendant and his certificated guardian for the latter's appointment as guardian ad litem of the minor in the suit. The certificated guardian did not appear, but was nevertheless appointed by the Court as guardian ad litem He, however, never appeared and took no steps to protect the interests of the infant. On the suit being decreed ex parte against the minor, the certificated guardian preferred an appeal, which was dismissed. The minor meanwhile attained majority and preferred a second appeal:

Held, that, inasmuch as the fact that the proposed guardian had preferred an appeal could not be taken as an index that he had consented to his appointment as guardian for the suit, the decree made against the minor could not be maintained and must Facts ousting jurisdiction must be patent on the face of the record before it can be predicated of a Court that it has exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law in terms of clause (a) to section 115, Civil Procedure Code.

A reference to arbitration on behalf of a minor without the sanction of the Court is not void but only voidable and it is entirely within the province of the Court, before which an award is filed in pursuance of such a reference, to determine whether the reference was void from its inception. But where an objection as to the legality of the award on the ground of absence of Court's sanction is taken and the Court holds the reference and award to be valid, its decision, even if it is erroneous, is on a point of law and as such is not open to revision, inasmuch as section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code is not directed against conclusions of law or facts in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved.

The words "being otherwise invalid" at the end of sub-clause (1) (c), paragraph 15, Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, are intended to give effect to the principle of finality in cases of arbitration, and where the judgment of the Court is pronounced according to the award under paragraph 16 (2), not only there is no appeal but there is no revision as well. Where a person applies for leave to sue as a pauper, and along with his application presents a plaint, but during the course of the inquiry into his pauperism, he files the requisite Court-fee, the suit, for the purposes of limitation, must be treated as having been instituted on the day on which the original application for leave to sue as a pauper was made, and not on the day when the Court-fee was filed. The withdrawal of the application to sue as a pauper, which is involved in the subsequent payment of the Court-fee is not equivalent to a refusal of permission such as is contemplated by rule 7 (3), Order XXXIII of the Civil Procedure Code. The withdrawal is an admission of nothing more than that at the time of payment the applicant is no longer a pauper. A Court is bound to take cognizance of the fact that it has no jurisdiction, however that may be brought to its notice and at whatever stage of the proceedings.

A memorandum of appeal was filed without a copy of the decree appealed against. The appeal was admitted and finally argued. But before writing the judgment the Judge noticed that there was no copy of the decree on the record. Upon this the Judge gave time to the appellant, who filed a copy of the decree long after the period of limitation for filing an appeal had expired. The question was raised whether that copy could be accepted or whether the appeal should fail:

It is not open to a Judge hearing an appeal from an order passed by a lower Court on remand by a High Court to call in question the earlier judgment of the High Court remanding the case to the lower Court for re-decision after setting aside the order of the Court below. A party not having filed a Letters Patent Appeal against such a judgment of a Single Judge remanding the case, cannot question the propriety of the order when the case again comes back to the High Court for final determination.

When a High Court sets aside the judgment of the lower Court and remands the case whether it orders a re-hearing or not, it is a final judgment and Letters Patent Appeal lies against such judgment but an order merely referring an issue for trial by the lower Court before the final determination of the appeal is not such a judgment. Pat MUNSHI LAL v. RAMASIS PURI, 3 P. and is to be repaid by a share of the profits, they must be treated as creditor and debtor.

An admission made by a party in a previous suit, compromised at a very early stage without any decision on that point by the Court, is not conclusive, and the party is not in any way estopped from showing in a subsequent suit that his statement in the previous suit however dishonestly made, was as a matter of fact untrue.

An agreement provided:—"It is settled that I should receive as pay for my labour ten annas six pies share of the profits I shall go wherever you send me and shall do whatever you ask me to do Without your permission I shall not go to my native place. If I go to my native place without your permission, I shall not take any share of the profits of the Company. The expenses you incur, the damages in respect of the goods and the unrealized amounts will be paid by me from my private property If you find any fault with me you can dispense with my services and I shall have no right to any share in the profits."

Held, that the person entering into the agreement could not be a partner but was a mere servant though paid by a share in the profits, and that the liability to pay losses was in respect of the losses occasioned by neglect or default, and that he was concerned only with the business entrusted to him and had nothing to do with the shop itself or with the business done by other servants engaged on similar terms. N MOHAMAD JUSUF v. PIRMOHAMAD 363

When a Company refuses to recognise the right of a person to be registered as a member on account of his failure to comply with certain prescribed rules and formalities, a question arises between the Company and that person, and he may apply under section 38 of the Companies Act and compel the Company to register him.

In proceedings under section 38 of the Companies Act, a Court may, but is not bound to, decide a serious question of title. Where the Court elects to decide the question, it may either decide it itself, or, under the proviso to the section, send it to somebody else in the form of an issue, but the decision on the issue, in either case, is the decision of the Court and is appealable in the manner provided by section 100 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The formalities and rules prescribed by the articles of association of a Company for compliance by an alleged transferee, or proposing member of a Company to get his name registered, are matters which the Company may or may not insist upon. It is not safe to import considerations into the question of construction of a document which might have arisen or may arise with reference to the question of construction of other documents

Cases of construction of documents must be decided on their own facts and the only question in each case is, how the law is to be applied to the particular facts which are put before the Court.

A lease recited that the lessee would be in possession of the leasehold naslan bad naslan generation after generation and ba qaemmuqami (in substitution in the place of the lessor, on payment of a certain amount of annual rent, and in no circumstances and under no contingency, whether arising out of default of non-payment of rent reserved or arising out of any other breach of conditions, would the lessor have the right of re-entry in himself:

Contempt of Court — Newspaper charging Muffussil Court with partiality pending proceedings—Remark, whether amounts to contempt of High Court—Bombay High Court, jurisdiction of, to deal with contempts of inferior Courts.

Contempt of Court—concld.

Every contempt of an inferior Court will not necessarily constitute a contempt of the High Court. All such cases must be considered on their own facts.

A newspaper in commenting upon a criminal trial pending against certain volunteers of a Temperance Committee in a Muffussil Court said, "..... there is a thick rumour that on the day on which the volunteers were arrested, the Trying Magistrate ran up the stairs to the Collector's Office and called on Mr. Painter and that some whisper took place between them. Again, Police Sahibs sit in chairs on the Magistrate's dais and wink at each other." The paper further alleged that when the Pleader for the accused observed that it was right that co-witnesses should be examined on the same day or else there was fear of the Police tutoring them, the Court adjourned the hearing one hour earlier than the hour of closing of the Court prescribed by law. The Local Government moved the High Court to take proceedings against the Editor for contempt. An objection as to jurisdiction was raised:

Held, (1) that the remarks constituted a contempt of the Court:

(2) that the High Court had jurisdiction to deal with the matter for the remarks amounted to its own contempt, as they impeded the due administration of justice, for which the High Court was responsible not only as regards itself, but also as regards all the Courts which were inferior to it.

Per Macleod, C. J. (Shah, J., contra).—The High Court of Bombay has the same powers of punishing for contempt as the Court of the King's Bench by virtue of the Common Law of England. Therefore, it has jurisdiction to deal with contempts of inferior Courts.

Any remarks reflecting on the character or impartiality of a Magistrate in the course of a trial must necessarily be contempt. B EMPEROR v. BALKRISHNA GOVIND KULKARNI, 24 BOM. L. R. 10; 23 CR. L. J. 77 753

A contract between the plaintiff and the defendants contained in a letter written by the former to the latter provided as follows :—"I take a settlement on purchase of all burnt steam and new coke in your Chaptaria Colliery at the rate of rupee one annas seven per ton at the mouth of the pit ..... The plaintiff removed about 9 waggons of coke, but did not pay its price in accordance with the terms of the contract. The defendants thereupon deducted the price of the 4 waggons of coke from the advance of Rs 201, re-sold the remainder of the coke to third persons and put an end to the contract. In a suit by the plaintiff for damages for breach of contract:

Held, (1) that under the contract, the subject-matter of the contract being ascertained goods, the property in the coke passed to the plaintiff and that after the purchase the coke in stock was the plaintiff's and that when he failed to pay the purchase price of the contents of the 9 waggons in accordance with the contract, that in itself, apart from the other provisions of the contract, was not sufficient to entitle the defendants to put an end to the contract, but that the plaintiff's failure to pay for the coke taken by him would give the defendants a right to put in force the other provisions of the contract, namely, to forfeit the balance of the deposit and to sell the remainder of the coke in stock on account of the plaintiff;

(2) that although the defendants could not rely upon section 107 of the Contract Act, because the provisions of that section could only be made applicable when notice had been given by the seller to the buyer of his intention to re-sell after the lapse of a reasonable time, yet having regard to the terms of the contract itself, the plaintiff was not to have the profit upon the re-sale and in the circumstances which had happened, it must go into the pocket of the defendants and could not be recovered by the plaintiff. C SHIB NARAIN v. RAM BILASH 263 price payable by inslatments, with interest, and on default in payment of any instalment, the entirety was to become due at once An agreement or kabala was executed about the same date, by which the appellant in consideration of the said amount sold his rights in the landing places and settlements and in the goodwill of the business of plying the ferry-boats, and the appellant undertook to close the business of plying the particular ferry-boats and agreed that if he ever carried on the business he would return the whole amount of the consideration. Copyright—Matter copied from non-copyright work—Notes—Original work—Abridgment.

The plaintiffs, a firm of publishers, had, in 1911, brought out in England an abridged edition of North's Translation of Plutarch's Life of Alexander, edited by a Mr. Parr for the use of Secondary schools. The abridgment was not effected by giving the substance of the original work in the language of the editor, but by excising various portions of the original work which were not considered suitable for the purpose for which the book was published The portions which were retained were divided into an introduction and various Chapters, marginal notes were added and at places where original matter had been left out, transitional notes were inserted so as to link up the thread of the narrative At the end there were a few pages of notes. This book was prescribed by the University of Bombay in October 19 as a text book for the Matriculation Examination of 19 9. In January 9 9, the defendants published another abridgment of the same original work. The book was styled Plutarch's Life of Alexander, North's Translation, with notes prepared by Mr. Darby, and contained (a) a statement of the contents, (b) an introduction divided into sections as to the author, the translator, Philip of Macedon, a sketch of Alexander's career and the character of Alexander, (c) the text consisting of selected passages, which in fact included all the passages selected by Mr. Parr for the plaintiffs' publication and certain other passages from North's Translation, with marginal notes, (d) notes and additional notes, (e) a summary, and (f) a map Some of the notes in the defendants' book coincided with those in the plaintiffs' book. Those notes were very elementary and such as any annotator, having sufficient familiarity with the ancient history and mythology of Greece, would be able to reproduce. The plaintiffs complained that the defendants had infringed their copyright in the text and in the notes :

Held, (1) that as regards the text, North's Translation of Plutarch's Life of Alexander was available to any one who wished to re-print it and that when the plaintiffs chose for their book about half of the original translation, they were not abridging it in the legal sense of the word, and that looking at their text by itself, it could not be considered an original literary work so as to be entitled to copyright;

(2) that as regards the notes, considering them as a whole and taking into consideration the nature and the extent of the use of the plaintiffs' notes in preparing the defendants' notes, it could not be said that that use was unfair ;

(3) that, therefore, there was no infringement of the plaintiffs' copyright either in respect of the text or in respect of the notes.

Per Macleod, C. J.—Skill and labour by themselves will not make up for the want of originality, while there is nothing original in picking out for publication portions of a work which is not copyright.

In law a selection of passages from a non-copyright work is not entitled to protection.

Per Shah, J.—There can be no copyright in respect of matter which is word for word part of a non copyright work.

The word "original" in the definition of copyright should be so construed as to give to the person who has used his brain the benefit of that use as far as possible, but it cannot be held that matter which is word for word taken from a non-copyright work, though only partially, constitutes an original work.

Independent labour must be apparent, and the reduction of the size of a work by copying some of its parts and omitting others, confers no title to authorship ; and the result will not be an abridgment entitled to protection. To shorten a work by leaving out the unimportant parts is not to abridge it in a legal sense. To abridge, in the legal sense of the word is to preserve the substance, the essence of the work in language suited to such a purpose; language substantially different from that of the original. To make such an abridgment requires the exercise of the mind; labour, skill and judgment are brought into play and the result is not merely copying. To constitute a proper abridgment, the arrangement of the book abridged must be preserved, the ideas must also be taken, and expressed in language not copied, but condensed To copy certain passages and omit others, so as to reduce the volume in bulk, is not such an abridgment as the Court would recognise as sufficiently original to protect the author. B Cooper v Macmillan & Co., 23 Bom. A decree for the payment of money can be granted on a simple money-bond executed by the guardian of a defendant during his minority for an antecedent debt due by him, which could have been recovered from his estate at the time

The guardian of a minor as also the Court of Wards cannot create a personal liability in the ward, but he has a right to acknowledge a pre-existing liability on the part of the ward in respect of which a decree could be passed and for this to execute a bond on the basis of which a decree against the minor may be passed

Per Hallifax, A. J. C.—The powers of a Court of Wards over the property of a ward are the ordinary powers of the guardian of a minor, supplemented by certain additional powers conferred by the C. Where a Sessions Judge makes over a criminal appeal for decision to an Additional Sessions Judge working in the same jurisdiction as himself and empowered to try cases or appeals made over to him by the Sessions Judge but subsequently, after notice to the parties, hears the appeal himself, he does not act outside his jurisdiction inasmuch as the making over of a case is not a "transfer" of the case.

The absence of any provision corresponding to section 531, Criminal Procedure Code, in respect of cases tried within the same Sessions Division by a lawfully appointed Judge of that Sessions Division whether he be the Sessions Judge or an Additional Sessions Judge shows that the Legislature did not think that any doubt as to the jurisdiction of such Judges could arise in view of the wording of section 9 of the Criminal Procedure Code. A BIRJU MARWARI v. EMPEROR, 19 A. But before making the order final, however, he should convert the proceedings into one under section 145, for in all cases, unless where the possession has already been determined by a Civil Court, or is undisputed, the proper procedure for a Magistrate to adopt is to convert a proceeding under section 144 into section 145 and determine the issue of possession once for all so as not to leave occasion for further dispute. Pat NANDKISHORE SAO v. BIKAN SINGH, 23 CR. If a report is wrongly relied on by a Magistrate taking proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, that would not amount to an error or want of jurisdiction which would warrant an interference of a High Court

A mere survey of the lands in dispute in a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, after inquiry from all the parties as to what land is in dispute does not amount to a "local inquiry" within the meaning of section 145 of the Act but is a mere ministerial act.

A party who throughout asserts that the lands mentioned in the proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code could be identified cannot be allowed on the judgment being against him to assert the contrary in High Court.

Section 350 of the Criminal Procedure Code applies to trials under Chapter XII and the word "accused" in that section does include persons against whom an order under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, has been drawn.

Therefore, in the case of proceedings under Chapter XII the evidence must be read over to the witnesses.

The non-reading over of depositions to the witnesses in a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, does not, however, invalidate the trial itself.

A tenant who is in possession of a portion of the land in dispute is not a necessary party to a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code.

Section 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code makes it imperative for the Magistrate, before recording a confession made to him in the course of a Police investigation, to question the person making it as to whether it is made voluntarily Telling an accused person that he should make his statement voluntarily and questioning him as to whether he is making it voluntarily are two very different things.

The omission to question an accused person before recording his confession as to whether he is making it voluntarily is a material omission which prejudices him and the defect is a fatal one not curable by section 533 of the Criminal Procedure Code Such a confession is not, therefore, admissible in evidence. A FARID v EMPEROR, 2 L. 422; 5 P. Criminal Procedure Code—contd.

A High Court always looks with suspicion on cases where proceedings under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, are started against a person after the Police have failed to procure evidence against him on a charge of a substantive offence Section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, is not intended for furnishing the Police with means of detaining persons against whom a definite charge has been made but broken down.

Accused was arrested on suspicion of being concerned in a dacoity, but discharged under section 169, Criminal Procedure Code, for want of sufficient evidence. He was re-arrested under section 55 of that Code, and proceedings were started against him under section 110 of the same Code wherein the Police put in evidence of his participation in the dacoity:

Held, that the evidence was inadmissible, and that the conviction based on it must be set aside inasmuch as if the evidence was sufficient to prove the participation of the accused in the dacoity, he should have been brought to trial for that offence, and if it was not, the Court had no right to allow it to be brought in to prejudice its mind against the accused in his trial for bad livelihood O BHAGWAT PRASAD v. EMPEROR, 24 O. (XVI of 1921), s. 2—Forfeiture of property under ss. 121, 122, Penal Code, abolished.

A sanction under section 196, Criminal Procedure Code, to prosecute an accused should be specifically directed to the particular sections of Chapter VI of the Code in respect of which proceedings are to be taken, and the order should be preceded by and be the result of a deliberate determination that proceedings shall be taken in respect of a particular section or sections and no other. It is opposed to the true intention of section 196, Criminal Procedure Code, to give a roving power to determine under what sections proceedings should be taken.

But a sanction under section 196, Criminal Procedure Code, to prosecute an accused in the alternative under section 121 or 121A of the Indian Penal Code is entirely specific and proper.

The expression "hearing the complainant" in section 252, Criminal Procedure Code, does not involve his examination on oath and a trial under Ordinance III of 1921 without such examination of complainant is not irregular.

The punishment of forfeiture of property for offences under sections 121, 122, Indian Penal Code, has been abolished by section 2 of the Indian Penal Code Amendment Act.

Convictions are revisable by the Superior Court, and the Superior Court will always insist on having materials before it so that it may be in a position to say whether the conviction is proper or not.

The main ingredient of an offence under section 447, Indian Penal Code, is that the trespass must be with the intention of annoying or insulting some one or must be with the intention of committing an offence and where there is nothing in the order of a Magistrate convicting an accused for criminal trespass which would show the intention of the accused, the conviction cannot be sustained. Pat DAMODAR DAS v EMPEROR, 23 CR L. When a warrant case is tried summarily, the procedure to be followed is that prescribed for the trial of warrant-cases, and, therefore, the memorandum of the substance of the evidence of each witness must, as provided by section 355 (2), be signed by the Magistrate.

A written statement filed by an accused person cannot take the place of his examination under section 342, Criminal Procedure Code.

Non-compliance with the requirements of section 342 or 355, vitiates the trial.

An accused person is entitled to know with certainty and accuracy the exact nature of the charge brought against him, and, unless he has this knowledge he must be seriously prejudiced in his defence. Where he is convicted on a charge different from that on which he is tried, the nature of the case made at the trial, the evidence given and the line of defence made are matters to be taken into consideration to decide whether he has been prejudiced or not in the trial. Pat BALKESHWAR SINGH v. EMPEROR, 23 CR. When a Court acquits an accused under section 470, Criminal Procedure Code, on the ground of his lunacy, it should simultaneously pass orders under section 471.

Section 471, Criminal Procedure Code, should not be interpreted as compelling a Court to send the accused to a lunatic asylum. All that is necessary is to see that such safeguards are taken as would keep the accused from mischief and it is permissible to order the accused to be kept under the control and custody of his parents.

A Trial Court's omission to pass an order under section 471 will not preclude a High Court from passing such an order in revision. Evidence to the effect that there are a number of pakka built shops, houses and wells in a village, a private school outside the abadi, a population of 3,000, that artisans for whom the place is famous sell their wares in neighbouring towns, and that land is owned in the village by Khatris, Brahmans and other non-agricultural tribes, is not sufficient to convert the village into a town.

——— Religious endowment—Dohli tenure—Alienation—Suit to challenge alienation

The dohli tenure is a peculiar kind of tenure to be found in the south-eastern districts of the Punjab. It is a rent-free grant of a small plot of land by the village community for the benefit of a temple, mosque or shrine, or to a person for a religious purpose. In the Revenue Records the proprietary body are recorded as the owners of the property, and the grantee is recorded as a tenant in the column of cultivation. So long as the purpose, for which the grant is made, is carried out, it cannot be resumed, but should the holder fail to carry out the duties of his office, the proprietors can eject him and put in some one else under a like tenure.

A tenure of this kind cannot be alienated by sale, or mortgage and any alienation of that character, if made by the dohlidar, is absolutely void and can be challenged by his successor. L SEWA RAM v. UDEGIR, 2 L. 313 252

Easement of necessity—Transfer of portion of land—Discharge of burden imposed upon portion transferred—Implied reservation of easement of necessity—Easements Act (V of 188?), s. 13 cl. (a).

Where the owner of two tenements or of one tenement divided into two parts transfers one part, he puts an end by contract to any relation which he might have himself created between the land sold and the land retained. He discharges the land so sold from any burden imposed upon it during his joint occupation; the condition of such land is thenceforth determined by the contract of alienation, and not by the previous user of the former common owner during his common ownership.

But where a man disposes of part of his land and that part affords an accommodation to the part retained, that accommodation will upon severance ripen into an easement, if it be such as to be absolutely necessary to the enjoyment of the part retained, and capable of constituting the subject-matter of an easement.

Where an owner grants part of his land and retains other parts himself, although the grantee may be in a more favourable position than the grantor in so far as the grantee may claim all easements necessary for reasonable enjoyment of the part so granted, the grantor may claim that all "easements of necessity," without which no enjoyment at all would be possible, should be raised by implication in favour of the part retained

Plaintiff took settlement of western portion of a plot abutting on a road from the landlord and subsequently defendant took settlement of the eastern portion of the same plot. In a suit by the plaintiff for declaration that the defendant had no right of way over the western portion of land:

Held, that the defendant was entitled to the right of way if it was established that at the time of the grant to the plaintiff there was a way of necessity in respect of the eastern plot which was retained by the landlord. C TUSTU MONDAL v. KENARAM MONDAL, 34 C. L. J. 518 24

Easement—Right of way—Servient tenement not to be saddled with heavier burden than proved—Mode of user.

In a claim of an easement over another's property the servient tenement should not be saddled with a heavier burden than what the plaintiff has succeeded in proving.

But when a particular mode of user is not heavier than the mode of user proved, the plaintiff may be allowed to use it in that particular way, e. g., the user of a way for horses may include the right to lead smaller animals as well but not larger animals or loads.

Where the user of a path is restricted to the passage of men, carts and palanquins the carrying of corpse through it does not add a heavier burden on it. C RAM KUMAR MAZUMDAR v. MOHIM CHANDRA DUTTA 579

The mere fact that land is waste does not necessarily show that no right of easement can be acquired over it.

The defendant blocked up the drain completely, thus stopping the flow of water of both houses. A sued to have the drain opened:

Held, that the plaintiff did not lose his entire right under section 43 of the Easements Act, as the additional burden could easily be reduced to its original limits by cutting up or blocking the connection between the new privy and the earlier drain, and that, therefore, he was entitled to a decree conditional on his severing the connection between them. A RAMESHWAR DAYAL v. MAHARAJ CHARAN, 20 A. admissible in evidence against the accused making the statement nor is it admissible against his co-accused as proving their participation in the dacoity.

A statement made by an accused to a Police Officer if it does not amount to a confession may, nevertheless, be used against him and more particularly if the statement turns out to be false in the light of the other evidence in the case If it amounts to a confession, then it must be excluded from evidence altogether under section 25, but in either event it can only be used against the accused making the statement.

A statement made by one accused person can only be used against another co-accused person if the provisions of section 30 are applicable.

The fact that a dupatta stolen in a dacoity was found some 40 days after the dacoity in the possession of a person, not hidden away but openly worn, does not lead to the necessary inference that that person took part in the dacoity.

On B's default, A made another application for execution for the balance, adding this time the sum awarded as costs of the Appellate Courts B objected to this inclusion, and, on matter going to High Court on appeal, raised the further point for the first time that the decree not being the final decree in the cause was not capable of execution:

Held, (1) that the Executing Court had no power to include the sum as it was not entered in the final decree;

Where in a suit to obtain possession of separate items of property from separate sets of defendants, an ex parte decree is passed which is not joint and indivisible, a Court is not justified in setting aside the decree against all the defendants merely upon an application by some of them.

Fraud—Party when may plead his own fraud—Fraud effectuated—Rule to be followed—Minor, whether can take advantage of guardian's fraud.

Where a fraud has been effectuated, the sound rule is to leave the parties exactly as they are, that is to say, to leave the property in the possession of whichever of the two parties it happens to rest with.

The Courts will not assist a party to a fraud to obtain possession of the subject of the fraud. Therefore, although a plaintiff will not be allowed to plead his fraud in order to obtain possession of the subject of the fraud, a defendant, who in spite of the fraud having been effectuated is still in possession, will be allowed to defend his possession by pleading the true nature of the transaction.

Although a minor may not be answerable for the fraud of his guardian, he cannot take advantage of it. L B MAUNG TIN v. MA MAI MYINT, 11 L. B R. 83 459

If in any transaction there has been a fraud and that fraud has been carried into effect to any material extent, a Court will not aid either party to take advantage of his fraud but will let the estate lie where it falls. But where the fraud has not been carried out, where nothing has been done under it, then the Court will aid the vendor to retain possession of his property and will not allow the vendee to take it, that is, to effectuate the fraud to which he was a party. L B MAUNG PO ZU v. MAUNG PO KWA, 11 L. Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 31, scope of – Sanction to sell minor's property- Necessity, recital of — Suit by minor to set aside alienation—Burden of proof—Fraud—Procedure.

An order of a District Judge giving sanction to a guardian of a minor to sell the minor's property must recite the necessity for the sale as required by section 31 (2) of the Guardians and Wards Act.

An order of sanction by a District Judge authorising the guardian of a minor to sell his property does not cure inherent defects that may exist in the sale. Sanction is prima facie evidence that the transaction is a good one but the minor may at any future time show that it was fraudulent or improper.

Where in a suit to set aside an alienation made by a guardian of a minor the evidence on both sides is before the Court, there is nothing to prevent the Court from coming to the conclusion that the sale is an improper one and not for the benefit of the minor, though the burden of proof in the first instance lies upon the person seeking to set aside the alienation.

Per Ramesam, J.—The effect of sanction under section 31 of the Guardians and Wards Act is that the burden of proof is shifted to the plaintiff and it is not necessary that fraud has to be made out on the part of the purchaser to impeach the transaction. M NALLAKA VENKATASWAMI v. RUGUM VIRANNA, 15 L. Hindu Law—Adoption — Estate received before adoption, whether divested—Wife of person adopted, whether can claim her husband's estate in natural family—Adoption, principle of.

When a male owner takes a full and distinct interest in property and the property vests in him absolutely, it cannot be divested by his subsequent adoption into another family.

The theory of adoption involves the principle of a complete severance of the boy from the family in which he is born and his substitution into the adopter's family as if he was born in it. The adoption operates as birth of the boy in the family of adoption and as civil death in the family of birth, with all the legal consequences incidental thereto.

A wife of a person adopted ceases along with her husband to belong to the natural family of the husband. She cannot, therefore, succeed to the estate of her husband which belonged to him while he continued to be in his natural family and which became divested because of his adoption. N MAROTI v. LAXMAN 362

——— Alienation by father—Son's pious obligation—Alienation invalid—Sons, whether bound—Mortgage by father—Legal necessity, proof of, to bind sons—Simple obligation against sons—Limitation, starting point of.

Hindu Law – contd.

A transfer by a Hindu father which is admittedly invalid in its inception, cannot become valid on the death of the father and be enforced against the sons merely on the ground of their pious duty under the Hindu Law to discharge their father's debt.

In the case of a mortgage made by a Hindu father, the son is not liable for the debt on the death of the father in the absence of proof of necessity. The remedy of the creditor on the basis of the son's pious duty is not co-extensive with his remedy on foot of a binding security.

A suit against the sons on the simple obligation created by a bond executed by their father must be brought within six years from the date of the bond and limitation against the sons does not begin to run from the date of the father's death.

The pious obligation resting upon the sons to discharge their father's debt does not extend to the payment of time-barred debts. O RAM CHHATTAR v. RAM LAL, 24 O. C. 295 950

——— Alienation by manager — Right to challenge—Heritability by surviving members—Subsequent born son, right of—Creditor—Legal necessity—Burden of proof.

Those who deal with a person who has only a limited interest in property and who professes to dispose of a larger interest, are prima facie bound to make out the facts which authorise such an alienation.

The right of challenging an alienation made by the family manager of a joint Hindu family is personal and is not inherited by the surviving members.

A son born subsequent to an alienation by a Hindu father cannot impeach that alienation, as he takes the family property as it exists at his birh, nor. can he inherit the right of his brother in existence at the time of the alienation but subsequently dead to challenge the said alienation.

A plaintiff is entitled to the amount paid by him for conducting the case on behalf of a minor defendant when the defence of the minor fails. N JAIRAM v. VENKATRAO 658

——— ——— by widow—Necessity—Burden of proof—Purchase by widow out of income of husband's estate—Accretion.

A person who deals with a Hindu widow having a limited estate is bound to establish the facts which justify the transactions under which he claims.

It is competent for a Hindu widow to so deal with the income of her deceased husband's estate, as to make it her own separate property, but the fact of her having so dealt with it must always be traced and proved.

Where a Hindu widow acquires the rights of the tenants of her deceased husband's estate, in part by release of arrears of rent, and in part by payment of cash derived from income of her husband's estate, the tenant rights so acquired are an accretion to the husband's estate, which, if it be possible for the widow to segregate, would require some unequivocal act on her part to lead

Where a sale by a Hindu widow is set aside, the person dispossessed is entitled to sums paid towards mortgages binding on the estate with interest, such interest to run concurrently with the mesne profits. He is also entitled to reasonable compensation for improvements effected so as to increase the value of the property, even though he was not the person who actually effected those improvements. The increased rent that is properly attributable to improvements can be properly set off against the mesne profits, even although the improvements were not actually executed by the person in possession at the moment when the decree for possession was made.

——— Bombay school—Exclusion from inheritance—Congenital and incurable dumbness—Obsolescence of disqualifications—Adoption—Person having dumb son or grandson, whether can adopt.

According to the Hindu Law prevailing in Bombay, a person suffering from congenital and incurable dumbness is incapable of inheriting.

It may be, as was pointed out in Surayya v. Subbamma, 53 IND. CAS. 498; 43 M. 4; 26 M. L. T. 154; (1919) M. W. N. 580; 37 M. L J. 405, that some of the grounds of exclusion as mentioned in the texts are obsolete. All the disqualifications, however, cannot be treated on the same footing. Each defect must be considered on its merits, and if it could be fairly and safely stated that it is obsolete, it may be treated in that manner.

In the lifetime of a natural son or grandson or a great grandson no valid adoption can be made.

A person having a grandson who is subject to the defect of dumbness from his birth cannot be described as sonless so as to make an adoption by him during the lifetime of the grandson valid. B BHARMAPPA v. UJJANGAUDA, 23 BOM. L. R. 1320 216

There are two systems of law in force in India, Hindu and Muhammadan Laws, both self-contained and both wholly independent of each other, and wholly independent of foreign and outside legal conceptions In each there are well-recognised rules relating to their religious and charitable institutions. It would be a serious inroad into the rights of Hindus and Muhammadans if the rules of the Hindu and Muhammadan Laws are to be construed in the light of legal conceptions borrowed from abroad, unless perhaps where they are absolutely, so to speak, in pari materia.

A "trust" in the sense in which the expression is used in English Law is unknown in the Hindu system, pure and simple.

Under Hindu Law the image of a deity of the Hindu pantheon is a "juristic entity" vested with the capacity of receiving gifts and holding property. Hindu religious institutions, such as Mutts, and various others known under different names, are regarded as possessing the same "juristic" capacity, and gifts are made to them eo nomine. The heads of these institutions have ample discretion in the application of their funds, but always subject to certain obligations governed by custom and usage. Called by whatever names, they are only the managers or custodians of the institutions. In no case is any property "conveyed" to or "vested" in them, nor are they "trustees" in the English sense of the word, although they are answerable as trustees in the general sense for maladministration.

A Matathipathe cannot, in the absence of justifying necessity or special custom, grant a lease of Mutt property to endure beyond his lifetime

In 1891 the Matathipathe of a Hindu religious institution in the town of Madura granted a permanent lease of certain lands which were "ordinary" Mutt property, not appropriated to any specific purposes. The Matathipathe died shortly afterwards, but his successor who held office till 1906 continued to receive rent from the lessee. The present head of the Mutt, who succeeded next, became aware of the transaction of 1891 in 1908. Meanwhile the lessee had granted a sub-lease of the lands which was to expire in 1912. Before its expiry, however, the sub-lessee took a direct fresh lease from the present Matathipathe. The lessee in 1913 sued his sub-lessee and the Matathipathe for declaration of title, for ejectment and for possession, alleging that he had acquired a good title against the Mutt under Articles 134 and 144 of the Limitation Act:

Held, that as Article 134 of the Limitation Act related to cases of specific trust and property "conveyed in trust," and was controlled by section 10 of the Act, it had no application to the present case; nor had the lessee acquired any title by adverse possession under Article 144 of the Limitation Act, for, in the absence of justifying necessity or special custom, the permanent lease granted by the Matathipathe expired at his death, after which the receipt of rent by the next Matathipathe must be considered to have been with the knowledge, which must be imputed to him, that the tenancy created by his predecessor ended with the predecessor's life and could, therefore, only be properly referable to a new tenancy created by himself and that under these circumstances the proper inference was that the tenancy of the lessee did not become adverse till the death of the second Matathipathe in 1906, P C VIDYA VARUTHI THIRTHA SWAMIGAL v. ——— Joint family—Partition—Formal separation need not be proved—Specification in sale-deed of shares of members, whether proof of separation.

In order to establish separation by members of a joint family, a plaintiff is not bound to prove formal separation accompanied by an apportionment of the family property It is sufficient if he can produce evidence to satisfy the Court that the position of the various members was such that they could not have been living as members of a joint family.

It is by no means an unusual thing for members of a joint family, when acquiring landed property by purchase, to cause to be specified in their document of title the shares which they would respectively take upon a partition. No clear inference in favour of separation or break up of the joint family can be drawn from a transaction of this sort. A JAIRAJI v. BHAGWAT PRASAD PANDE 84

——— ——— Presumption—Separation—Actual partition not proved—Separation inferred from circumstances.

In the case of a Hindu Mitakshara family there is a presumption of jointness and any one who pleads disruption must prove it.

Where there is no direct evidence of disruption separation may be inferred from other circumstances

Separation may be proved by acts or declarations which show an agreement and intention to separate, such as cesser of commensality, separate occupation of portions of the property, separate enjoyment of distinct shares of the profits, separate definement of shares in the Revenue Records, agreement to divide the proceeds in definite shares or other acts which are inconsistent with the family remaining joint, such as separate transactions between themselves or with others Mere cesser of commensality or of co-worship, division of the income, definement of shares in the revenue or land registration records, separate occupation of portions of the property or separate collections of rents, or separate dealings, are not conclusive, unless there is an intention to separate. They are all evidence of separation, and may lead to the inference that there was a separation. Pat TARA PRASAD JHA v. MAYA DEBYA, (1922) Pat. 91; 4 U. P. L. R. (PAT.) 18 687

——— Reversioner's Interest—Alienation—Spes successionis.

The interest of a Hindu reversioner is an interest expectant on the death of a qualified owner; it is not a vested interest, it is a spes successionis or a mere chance of succession: it cannot be sold, mortgaged, assigned or relinquished, for, a transfer of a spes successionis is a nullity and has no effect in law. But though a transfer of his interest by a reversioner is void, he may, by becoming a party to a compromise and by taking the benefit of the compromise, be estopped from claiming as a reversioner.

So long as the estate is vested in the female heiress, the interest of the reversioner is a mere chance of succession which cannot form the subject of any contract, surrender or disposal.

No one can have any estate or interest, at law or in equity, contingent or other, in the property of a living person to which he hopes to succeed as heir-at-law or next-of-kin of such living person; during the life of such person no one can have more than a spes suceessionis, an expectation or hope of succeeding to his properties nemo est hæres viventis; there is no such character in law as the heir of a living person or as his statutory next-of-kin.

Under the principles of Hindu Law, even apart from the provisions of section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act the interest of a reversioner is not alienable. C ANNADA MOHAN ROY v. GOUR MOHAN MALLIK, 25 C. W. N. 496; 33 C. L. J. 457; 48 C. 536 27

The preferable right to perform the shradh, funeral oblation, to the last owner is a primary fact to be taken into consideration in determining the rule which is to govern the right of succession N PANDU v. ABDUL KADAR 693

Coercion or fraud is generally a necessary substratum over which a case of undue influence rests. Therefore, in a case of undue influence allegations of fraud may simply be made with a view to emphasize it.

Though it be found that a donor was well aware of what he did, yet if it be further found that his disposition to do it was produced by undue influence, the transaction would be set aside.

Where most of the facts deposed to by the witnesses of one party are matters of which the opposite party would have in the natural course of the circumstances of any particular case direct knowledge, it is an act of impertinence on the part of the latter party to ask a Court to disbelieve the evidence led by the former party when he himself is not prepared to take the responsibility of an oath and give to the Court his own version of those facts.

It is quite unsafe to accept the evidence more or less secondary in its character and certainly of inferior quality to the evidence which would have been produced but has been withheld.

Where in a matter of a deed of gift alleged to be executed through undue influence the relation of influence has been established, and it is also made clear that the bargain is with the influencer and in itself unconscionable, then the person in a position to use his dominating power has the burden thrown upon him, and it is a heavy burden, of establishing affirmatively that no domination was practised so as to bring about the transaction, but that the grantor of the deed was scrupulously kept separately advised in the independence of a free agent.

Where undue influence is alleged it is necessary to examine very closely all the circumstances of the case. The principles are always the same though the circumstances differ and as a general rule the same questions arise. O CHAURAS KUAR v. ABHAIRAJ KUMAR, 8 O. L. J. 631 380

The fact that a reversioner was one of the parties to a sale transaction effected by a Hindu widow and was present at the time the consideration-money was paid to her, does not give rise to a presumption that the payment was made for legal necessity. The vendee must prove that the presence of the reversioner at the time of the payment made him believe that this money was required by the widow for legal necessity and that for this reason he did not trouble to make any further enquiry. O SHEOAMBAR KHAN v. BALKARAN SINGH, 8 O. ——— Widow—Surrender — Alienation—Legal necessity—Consent of reversioner—Presumption—Appeal, second—Finding of fact.

The doctrine of surrender or renunciation has no application to a case where a Hindu female does not transfer the whole of the estate which descends to her from the male propositus

The consent of the nearest reversioner is always presumptive proof of legal necessity which justifies an alienation on the part of a Hindu female The question, however, whether the evidence adduced in any particular case amounts to "a presumptive proof" or not, is a question of the sufficiency or insufficiency of evidence, and, as such, a pure question of fact.

The finding that consent obtained in the particular circumstances of a case is not sufficient to justify a presumption of legal necessity in favour of the vendee, is one of fact and cannot be assailed in second appeal. O RAM BODH SINGH v. RAM NARAYAN SINGH, 8 O L J. 512; 4 U. ——— Will, construction of—Bequest in favour of female.

A bequest in favour of a Hindu female must be construed in the same way as any other disposition of property.

A Hindu testator after reciting in his Will that he was the malik of his property made the following bequest:—"After my death Musammat Khushali will be the malik of the property and after her death Musammat Parwati will be the malik of the property:

Held, that the testator intended to give an absolute estate to Musammat Khushali and Musammat Parwati.

Obiter.—If the ideas of a Hindu are naturally repugnant to giving an absolute title to females, there is nothing easier for him than to limit the title of a female donee. L DHANPAT RAI v. BADRI DAS, 3 L. L.J. 1 455

He went on to state that his wife would have the same power over the property as he himself had:

Held, that the wife obtained an absolute estate in the property devised. L GOPI RAM v. ACHHRU RAM 462

——— ———, construction of—Uncertainty—Charitable bequest—Cy-pres, doctrine of, applicability of—Reversioner, remote—Right to challenge—Will.

In construing a Will the Court must bear in mind who the testator is and the language used by him for expressing his wishes which may or may not be adapted for legal precision, and the primary rule is to ascertain whether the object aimed at by the testator could be carried out without making a new Will for him. Although there may be vagueness in the selection of the places or in the allocation of the funds, so long as it is ascertainable that the testator had a particular object in view, that object must be given effect to.

If the Court can ascertain that there is a general charitable intention expressed in a Will, the fact that the particular object for which the charity is intended does not exist or that the fund intended for that charity cannot exhaust the whole income will not be any reason for holding that the bequest fails either wholly or in part.

The doctrine of cy-pres should receive as extended an application as possible so as to give effect to the true intent and aim of the donor. His lapses, his ignorance, and his failure to understand the situation should not fetter the Courts so long as the purposes specified by him are not violated.

A Hindu testator made a Will in which he said, "I want the entire residue of my estate to be applied by my executors in some manner from which my brotherhood will derive benefit. My executors should sell my house property and add the sale-proceeds to the cash balance and in this manner apply the total in work of public good, but whatever is done the benefit of my brotherhood is to be kept in view. What I mean is this. They are to give assistance in the construction by the brotherhood of any temple, etc., at any holy place, etc., or they are to give scholarships in any school to students belonging to the brotherhood":

Held, that the clause was not void for uncertainty.

A suit to contest a Will must be brought by the immediate reversionary heir of the testator, but if the nearest reversionary heir refuses without sufficient cause to institute proceedings or has precluded himself by his own act or conduct from suing or has colluded with the opposite party or has accepted the Will, and the next presumable heir states in the plaint the circumstances under which he claims to sue, a Court would exercise a judicial discretion in determining whether he is or is not competent to sue. L SUNDAR LAL v. KULLU RAM 820

If words are used in a Will executed by a Hindu husband in favour of his wife conferring absolute ownership upon the wife, the wife enjoys the rights of ownership without their being conferred by express and additional terms unless the circumstances or the context are sufficient to show that such absolute ownership was not intended.

The word "malik" is not a "term of art" and does not necessarily define the quality of the estate taken but the ownership of whatever that estate may be.

A Hindu, governed by Mayukha Law, executed a Will by which he constituted his wife as owner (malik) and directed that whatever property remains after her death, the wife shall leave the said property to his two daughters in such manner as she may like :

Held, that the use of the word "malik" taken with the context of the Will indicated a clear intention to pass an absolute estate.

Held, also, that there was no trust created in favour of the daughters as the subject-matter on which the trust was to operate was too uncertain to enable the Court to give it administration. P C BHAIDAS SHIVDAS v. BAI GULAB, 26 C. Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), s. 31, cl. (2), scope of—Award—Suit to contest award not maintainable—Jurisdiction, exclusive—Civil Court, jurisdiction of—Proper remedy—Person not having notice not bound.

The Land Acquisition Act creates a special jurisdiction and provides a special remedy and, ordinarily, when jurisdiction has been conferred upon a Special Court for the investigation of matters which may possibly be in controversy, such jurisdiction is exclusive.

Where by an Act of the Legislature powers are given to any person for a public purpose from which an individual may receive injury, if the mode of redressing the injury is pointed out by the Statute, the ordinary jurisdiction of the Civil Court is ousted and in the case of injury the party cannot proceed by action.

The proviso to section 31, clause (2) of the Land Acquisition Act is of limited application and applies only to cases where the person is under a disability or is not served with notice of the proceedings before the Collector.

Where a person has no notice of the apportionment proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act, he cannot be bound by the award or by the decision. C SAIBESH CHANDRA SARKAR v. BEJOY CHAND MOHTAP, 26 C. W N. 506 711

Land Registration Act (VII B. C. of 1876), ss. 42, 52, 55, 63—Jurisdiction—Land Revenue Deputy Collector, when to make reference to Civil Court—Registration of name in Land Registration Record—Revision—Discretion.

Where an applicant for registration of his name in the Land Registration Record claims to have succeeded to any proprietary right, whether by purchase, inheritance, gift or otherwise, it is necessary for him to establish not only that the succession or transfer has taken place but that he has acquired possession in accordance with such succession or transfer. But where he claims to have assumed charge of the estate or property either as joint proprietor or as manager, it is sufficient for him to establish that his possession exists.

Hence where each of the two applicants claims to have assumed charge of an endowment, the Collector has simply to see with whom possession exists. If he finds, as a matter of fact, that possession exists with one of the applicants, he has no jurisdiction to refer the matter to the Civil Court, but should order the name of the person in possession to be recorded in the Land Registration Record.

The jurisdiction either to determine summarily the question of the right to possession or to refer the matter in dispute to the Civil Court only arises where it is not proved to the satisfaction of the Collector that any person is in possession of the interest in dispute.

The exercise of revisional powers is always discretionary, and where an aggrieved party has other remedy available, a High Court is unwilling to interfere.

Per Bucknill, J.—When a right thing has been done in a wrong way, for example, when a Civil Court has entertained a reference made by a Land Registration Deputy Collector, which the latter had no jurisdiction to make and the former no jurisdiction to entertain, but the conclusion arrived at by the Civil Court is correct, the High Court would not quash the order in revision. Pat ALI ZAMIN v. MUHAMMAD AKBAR ALI 135

One of several joint landlords of a jote cannot maintain a suit for enhancement of rent in respect of the jote or for additional rent for additional area comprised in the jote.

Apart from Statute, a tenure does not necessarily merge in the proprietary right upon the union of the two interests. Even under section 111, clause (d), of the Transfer of Property Act, there must be an union of the entire interest of the lessor and the lessee in order that merger may take place. So, under that Act, there would be no merger by the purchase by a proprietor of the interest of a tenure-holder unless the proprietary interest and the interest as tenure-holder are co-extensive.

The mere fact that a tenant agrees to pay rent separately to one of the co-sharer landlords would not constitute a separate tenancy. Where, however, there is a separate kabuliyat in favour of one of the co-sharer landlords, it may be held that there is a separate tenancy. The question whether a separate tenancy is created depends upon the circumstances of each case.

The plaintiffs brought a suit for enhancement of rent for the lands of an original jote and for recovery of such rent for Pous kist of 1318 B. S. They also alleged that there had been accretion to the jote and that the defendants were liable to pay reasonable rent for the excess lands, which might be assessed for 1315—13 8 B. S.:

Held, (1) that having regard to the provisions of section 154 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the plaintiffs were not entitled to rent of the original lands of the jote at the enhanced rate for the Pous kist of 1318;

2) that there being no provision in section 52 such as is contained in section 154 the defendants were liable to pay rent for the additional lands at the enhanced rate for the past period also. C MONMOTHA PAUL CHAUDHURY v. MOHENDRA NATH BOSE 469

An ex parte decree for arrears of rent which has been duly executed is of some evidence as to the rate of rent.

There cannot be any estoppel against Statutes.

A defendant in a suit for rent at a certain rate is not incompetent to raise a defence under section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act by reason of the fact that that defence was not taken in a previous suit for rent which resulted in a decree at the rate claimed by the plaintiff.

The whole scheme of the Bengal Tenancy Act is to prevent the landlord from circumventing the provisions of the Act to the detriment of the illiterate tenants. Section 147A of the Act shows the scheme on which the Act was framed. C NAFAR CHANDRA PAL v. BHUSI MOLLA 581 ——— Holding over, effect of—Creation of new tenancy—Enhancement of rent, suit for—Presumption—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss 50, 105, 105*A*.

When a tenant holds over after the expiration of the term of a tenancy, it is a new tenancy coming into operation after the date of the expiration of the term of the previous tenancy.

A kabuliyat executed in 1282 B S. creating a tenancy for a term of 3 years stated that, after the termination of the period of settlement, the tenants would take a fresh settlement on a proper rent. After the tenancy had come to an end in 1284 B. S, the tenants held over and continued paying rent at a uniform rate for more than 20 years. In a proceeding for enhancement of rent on the ground of rise in prices of staple food crops:

Held, that the origin of the tenancy should be considered to be from the year 1285 B S., that the presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act had been rebutted, and that, consequently, the landlords were entitled to have fair and equitable rent settled under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. C UDOY CHANDRA BASU v. MAHAMMAD ALI REPARI 589

A suit for recovery of rent in respect of a patni by a transferee from an heir of a deceased patni-holder who has not got his name registered in the Collectorate under section 78 of the Land Registration Act, is maintainable by reason of section 81 of the Act if there is a kabuliyat entered into by the defendant-tenant in favour of the heir transferor.

Section 16 of the Bengal Tenancy Act being a penal provision should be strictly construed. It applies only to a person who claims the rent as a holder of the tenure and not to a person who claims it by virtue of purchase from the person to whom the rent accrued due.

Obiter.—A person who has been deprived of possession of part of the demised premises should not be held liable for the whole rent for ever. This principle applies with greater force where the tenant is deprived of any portion of the leasehold property by any act on the part of the landlord himself. C MESBAHUDDIN AHMED CHOWDHURY v. ABDUL BORKAT AHAMADULLA, 34 C. Held, (1) that the parties intended the clause to apply to occasions on which a number of Ruling Chiefs should congregate at Delhi at one time and create competition for house accommodation, as distinguished from isolated visits of single Chiefs, and that the clause was applicable to the occasion of the Conference of Ruling Chiefs held at Delhi in October 1916;

(2) that under the clause the landlord was entitled to 25 per cent of the sum recovered by the tenant from a Chief on such an occasion without any deduction on account of any commission paid or any expenses incurred by him. C NAURANG AHMAD v. BASHESHAR NATH, 5 P. W. R 1922 115

——— Occupancy holding—Transfer — Recognition by landlord—Knowledge—Burden of proof—Patwari, authority of—Acquiescence—Construction of document—Operative part—Recitals—Zerait, meaning of, in Bihar—Forgery—Test—Conveyancing—Corporeal and incorporeal hereditaments

Per Dawson Miller, C. J.—The receipt of rent by a landlord from the transferee of a holding, not transferable by custom, validates the transfer. But the Gomashta or Patwari of the landlord, although authorised to collect rents on his behalf, has no authority by taking rent from a transferee to create the relationship of landlord and tenant between his master and the transferee. In such cases the landlord would not generally be bound unless he accepted the rent knowing the source from which it came.

In such cases it must be shown that the landlord had knowledge of the transaction and ratified it either expressly or by implication.

If a Court is satisfied upon the natural construction of the operative part of a deed that a certain property passes, notwithstanding that the construction may be difficult, the recitals have no binding force.

In Bihar the term zerait is used to denote all lands in direct cultivation of indigo planters for cultivation of indigo as distinguished from cultivation of indigo by raiyats. The factory may hold the land as proprietor, tenure-holder raiyat, or under-raiyat and whatever the interest may be the land is still called zerait. The word used in this sense has no connection with the term zerait as used in the Bengal Tenancy Act and meaning proprietor's private lands.

Per Das, J.—An assertion by a tenant does not establish a case of recognition. It must be established that such an assertion was made to the knowledge of the landlord and that the landlord acquiesced in the assertion deliberately and with knowledge as to its effect.

Parties cannot be said to acquiesce in the claims of others unless they are fully cognizant of their right to dispute them, and where acquiescence is relied on, it must be shown that the person acquiescing was aware of the matter in which he acquiesced, and of the effect of such acquiescence. Recognition, like waiver, must be an intentional act with knowledge.

The fact that the transferee of an occupancy holding pays the rent as such transferee does not decide the question that the transferee has been recognised by the landlord as his tenant: he must establish that the landlord accepted rent from him as a tenant. In other words, it is the act of the landlord that decides the question, and not the act of the person who claims the status of tenant.

Where the circumstances are equally consistent both with the case of the tenant who sets up recognition and with the case of the landlord who denies it, the tenant, on whom the onus of proof as to recognition lies, must fail.

It is not within the scope of the authority of a Patwari or a rent Collector to consent on behalf of his master to the transfer of an occupancy holding. That is an important act to be performed only by a person having some at least of the powers of a manager.

A person who has conveyed his proprietary interest to another person but whose name is still borne on the Collector's register, cannot, by giving a rent receipt, recognise a person as having a right of occupancy in the land, who otherwise had no such right.

It is quite true that the recitals in a conveyance are subordinate to the operative part and that, consequently, where the operative part is clear, it is treated as expressing the intention of the parties, and it prevails over any suggestion of a contrary intention afforded by the recitals: but it is well-established that where the operative part is doubtful and it is impossible to say, on a mere reading of it, to which properties it refers, then the recitals can and ought to be used to explain its meaning; and that while, for the purpose of construing the operative part, the whole of the instrument may be referred to, yet the recitals leading up to it are more likely to furnish the key to its true construction than the subsidiary clauses of the deed. For instance, parcels of a deed described with certainty are not cut down by recitals showing that something less was intended to pass; but the recitals assist the construction of the operative part where there is an ambiguity in the operative part as to the property affected.

When a Court is considering, not whether the tenant can by lapse of time acquire a right of occupancy in the land but whether his status as an occupancy tenant has been recognised by the landlord by a series of transactions culminating in the lease itself, it is important to consider how the land has been described in the lease itself and whether there is a demise in respect of that land within the jama mentioned in the lease.

An occupancy holding forms a property by itself and is capable of being held and is in fact held distinct and apart from the estate, within the ambit of which it may happen to lie.

The old modes of conveyancing under which an estate accompanied by possession passed by livery, while future estates and other rights in land passed by grant, gave a practical rule for distinguishing between corporeal and incorporeal hereditaments. The old conveyancing test is now obsolete; but the distinction is still maintained, and such rights as are not accompanied by exclusive possession are classed amongst incorporeal hereditaments whereas those rights which entitle the owner to the present possession of the land or to receipt of rent and profit are classed as corporeal hereditaments. It is quite true that a right of occupancy, looked at from the point of view of right of property and not subject of property, is incorporeal in its nature; but the actual possession of the land, to which a person having a right of occupancy is entitled, attracts it to the class of corporeal hereditaments.

It is dangerous to come to a conclusion on the question of forgery on a mere comparison of the writing in a disputed document with the writings in admitted documents.

One of the most useful tests in considering a case of forgery is to see whether a clear dissimilarity of habit can be traced through the documents tendered. If there exists such a dissimilarity, then it is difficult to say that the same person wrote them all The judicial mind has constantly taken advantage of the characteristic peculiarities of individuals when a question has been raised whether their writings have been forged, such peculiarities being most commonly manifested in the formation of an idea or in the mode of spelling particular words.

The question whether the presumption of the correctness of the Record of Rights has been rebutted by certain kabuliyats is more a question of fact than of law.

Every tenure, whether permanent or otherwise, is subject to the incident of enhancibility of rent.

Where in a suit for enhancement of rent of a tenure under section 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the plaintiff has proved that, at the inception of the tenancy, there was no condition excluding the tenure from the operation of the ordinary liability for enhancement of rent, the Court would be justified on this evidence to conclude, without any evidence to the contrary, that the same state of

An administration suit is not a suit for land and can proceed on the Original Side of the High Court, even although it appears that there are immoveable properties, alleged to belong to the estate, outside the jurisdiction.

It is only when the reference commences before the Commissioner on the accounts being filed that it can be ascertained what are the contentions of the parties and whether the accounts filed together with the objections and surcharges show that there are properties either inside or outside the jurisdiction belonging to the estate. When claims to such properties are raised before the Commissioner, then it is a matter for him to decide what action to take, and even if he is of opinion that he has jurisdiction to decide questions of title to immoveable property, it will be open to the parties to ask him to make a reference for the opinion of the Court, when the Court will be in a position to decide how the disputed questions of title should be tried. B ABDUL HUSSEIN v. MAHOMEDALLY, 23 BOM. Article 134 of the Limitation Act is controlled by section 10 of the same Act, and refers to cases of specific trust and property "conveyed on trust."

A Hindu or Muhammadan may "convey in trust" a specific property to a particular individual for a specific and definite purpose when the person to whom the legal ownership is transferred would become a trustee in the specific sense of the term. "Conveyed in trust" is, however, hardly the right expression to apply to gifts of lands or other property for the general purposes of a Hindu religious or pious institution. L DIWAN SINGH v. Such liability cannot be read into it by proof aliunde or by the subsequent admissions of the acknowledgor, although oral evidence is admissible to prove the identity of the debt, property or right in respect of which the acknowledgment is made, or the name of the creditor or of the person entitled to the right or property or the date of an acknowledgment, and these need not appear on the face of the writing.

Unless the language of the document be identically the same, a decision upon the construction of one document cannot be of much assistance to the Court in construing another document and each case has to be treated on its own merits.

A postcard stating "..... I had said that I would come on Tuesday but as the goods had not been sold and as I was not keeping good health, I could not come. But I will very positively come on Tuesday with the money. Have no doubt about this," was set up to be an acknowledgment of debt:

A land belonging to the plaintiff was taken possession of by the defendant in April 1904. In consequence of dispute between the parties the land was attached under section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code on the 10th June 1904. On 2nd May 1906 the plaintiff brought this suit for declaration of his title to and for recovery of possession of the land alleging that the cause of action arose on the 10th June 1904, the date of the attachment:

Held, (1) that the suit though framed as a suit for possession could not be treated as such, because the possession was not with the defendant but with the Magistrate who was not and could not be a party to the suit and that the suit was a suit for declaration governed by Article 120 of the Limitation Act;

(2) that as the possession of the Magistrate was in law the possession of the true owner, the defendant's possession was determined upon the Magistrate's taking possession under the attachment or in other words the plaintiffs must be taken to have been restored to possession constructively on the date of the attachment and that he, therefore, got a fresh starting point for limitation and that

This order was, however, reversed by the Commissioner on the 3rd May 1913. The plaintiffs remained in possession and brought the present suit for a declaration of their title as adna maliks on the 2nd April 1919:

Held, that, though the denial by the defendants of plaintiffs' title in 1912 gave them a cause of action, the order passed by the Commissioner on the 3rd May 1913 gave them a fresh cause of action and that, therefore, the present suit, which was brought within six years of that date, was within time. Of all things that do not appear and of all things that do not exist the reckoning in a Court of Law is the same.

In clause 5, Article 182, Schedule I, Limitation Act, 1908, the words "in accordance with law" must be taken to qualify both the application for execution as well as the step taken in aid of execution.

In order that an application may be in accordance with law, it must ask the Court to do something which the Court is competent to do.

The question whether an application for execution or for taking some step-in-aid of execution is one according to law must be determined with reference to the circumstances of each case. It is not every failure to comply with the requirements of Order XXI, rule 11, clause 2, Civil Procedure Code, that would vitiate the application. Informalities of a material character, but not of an immaterial character, would vitiate the application.

Applications for the execution of a decree for possession of immoveable property were made one after another on the 6th December 1911, on the 6th December 1912, on the 7th December 1914, and on the 8th December 1916. In the application of 7th December 1914, there was no mention of costs nor of the application of 1912 as required by sub-clauses (i) and (h) of clause 2, rule 11, Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code:

Held, (1) that the omission to mention the amount of costs in the application of 1914 was a defect of such an immaterial character as could hardly be said to render the application one not in accordance with law;

(2) that the omission to mention the application of 1912 was such a material defect as to render the application of 1914 not in accordance with law, inasmuch as this last application, as it was presented to the Court, was on the face of it time-barred and on that application, as it stood, the Court had no power to grant the relief sought. S SUHIJRAM TAHILRAM v. TOWER, 15 S. The cash and articles were delivered on the Tilak day to the defendant at Patna and it was arranged that the marriage should be performed on a certain date. A week before the date of marriage the defendant refused to perform the marriage and returned a portion of the Tilak money. In a suit for the balance and loss in connection with marriage arrangements it was pleaded that as the plaint showed that the defendant returned a part of the Tilak money and promised to pay the balance shortly, a new contract was entered into subsequent to the original contract:

Held, that as whole of the cash and articles were not returned, section 63 of the Contract Act did not apply in the case, and that as the plaintiff never intended to accept the mere promise which the defendant had not fulfilled, the parties were relegated to their original position and that the plaintiff was, therefore, entitled to balance and costs with interest.

Held, also, that the Court at Muzaffarpur, within whose jurisdiction the marriage was to be performed, had jurisdiction to try the case although the contract was made and cash and articles were delivered at Patna outside that jurisdiction.

Held, further, that the suit was not governed by Article 36 of the Limitation Act as the suit was simply a suit for damages on breach of contract. Pat MATHURA PRASAD SINGH v. SATYA NARAYAN PRASAD SAHI 812

In every mortgage there is a personal covenant to pay, unless the contrary is expressly stated or appears by necessary implication from the terms of the bond. Where there is no express covenant, that necessary implication arises out of the terms of most foreclosure and many usufructuary mortgages, but not out of those of a mortgage for sale. N JIWANDAS v. JANAKI 53

——— Prior and puisne mortgagees, rights of — Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV.

An owner of a property, who is in the rights of a first mortgagee and of the original mortgagor as acquired at a sale under the first mortgage, is entitled at the suit of a subsequent mortgagee, who is not bound by the sale or the decree on which it proceeded, to set up the first mortgage as a shield.

An omission by a prior mortgagee to make a puisne mortgagee a party to the suit instituted by him to execute his mortgage does not prevent him from setting up that prior mortgage in a subsequent suit by the puisne mortgagee in cases where he would have been so entitled before the Transfer of Property Act, 1882.

Where a puisne mortgagee not made a party to the suit of a prior mortgagee seeks to enforce his mortgage, it is the duty of the Court to give the plaintiff the opportunity of occupying the position which he would have occupied if he had been a party to the former suit. P C SUKHI v. GHULAM SAYDAR KHAN, (1921) M. ——— Redemption, if and when can be effected before expiry of term stated in bond—Redemption and foreclosure, general principle as to—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss 60, 62.

The general principle as to redemption and foreclosure is that in the absence of any stipulation, express or implied, the right to redeem and the right to foreclose are co-extensive and this principle is embodied in sections 60 and 62 of the Transfer of Property Act. But there is nothing in law to prevent the parties from making a provision that the mortgagor may discharge the debt within the specified period and take back the property. The question in each case is whether upon the terms of the contract between the parties the intention was such as to give the mortgagor a right to redeem before the expiry of the latest date fixed for payment. C JAMIR HOWLADAR v ARABJAN BIBI 273

The mere fact that a usufructuary mortgagee is given an option of recovering from the mortgagor at the end of every year any deficiency in the interest provided for by the mortgage, does not make the interest cease to be a part of the mortgage-money and a mortgagor at the time of redemption must pay the principal and interest due at that time. A ULFAT RAI v. KANHAIYA LAL, 20 A. A mortgage provided that the mortgagor shall re-pay the mortgage-money at a certain rate of interest within three years, that the interest shall be payable yearly, and that if for two consecutive years the interest due remained unpaid, the mortgagee would be entitled to obtain possession of the mortgaged property in lieu of the principal sum secured by the mortgage subject to the condition that in the event of his getting possession of the mortgaged property the liability of the mortgagor for interest on the principal money shall cease and the profits of the mortgaged property shall go to the mortgagee. When a Muhammadan has promised a woman whom he marries a dower but that dower has not been paid, she, when he dies, can lawfully remain in possession of his property until her dower is paid by her husband's heirs or until she has succeeded in realising it out of the usufruct which she enjoys by reason of her being in possession, but she has to render to the heirs an account.

The dower-debt is a definite portion of the widow's estate and her heirs are entitled to hold the possession of her deceased husband's property with the same legal incidences as were possessed by the widow herself. If the widow transfers her dower-debt and its security to a stranger, such a conveyance may also include in law the right to possession of her husband's property until the dower-debt is in some way liquidated.

In order to effect the transfer of a widow's dower-debt with its security, express words so doing must be proved.

Quære—Why if express words of transfer are sufficient, a clearly implied covenant should not be effective?

The consideration of the proper construction of a document is often a mixed question of fact and of law

A Muhammadan widow, holding her husband's property in lieu of dower, executed a document in favour of a son of her late husband's brother providing: "I do hereby willingly sell and absolutely vend without reserving the right of cancellation to ..the whole and entire one-third share of mine .....owned and possessed by me together with all rights and appurtenances, for a consideration of a monthly allowance of ..till my death and I have put .....him in possession of the vended property as ab olute proprietor in my place..... In short the proprietary interest and all rights, title and interest which I had in the vended properties have, under this sale-deed, been transferred (from me and (become extinct and have devolved on and vested in the said purchaser and his heirs and representatives..... ..After my death my heirs and representatives shall not have any right of interference in or objection or claim to the vended properties." On a suit by the heir of the deceased husband of the widow for possession claiming the deed to be inoperative:

Held, on construction of the document,

(1) that this instrument did not transfer the widow's dower-debt and its security;

(2) that the general trend of the deed indicated an out-and-out sale of the whole estate;

(3) that it was only upon the widow's death that the plaintiff's cause of action really arose. Pat ABDUL RAHMAN v. WALI MUHAMMAD 224

——— Marriage—Shia—Requisites of valid marriage—Marriage performed secretly—Restitution of conjugal rights

Plaintiff, a Shia Muhammadan, and defendant No. 1, a Shia girl, who was above 20 years of age, contracted a secret marriage of their own choice and of their own free-will and at the time the ceremony took place the plaintiff had an intention of having a public ceremony performed later with the consent of his wife's family and did not intend to consummate the marriage until that ceremony was performed. His wife's relatives opposed his access to his wife and endeavoured to marry her to another man. Thereupon, he sued for restitution of conjugal rights It was alleged on behalf of the defendants that no marriage ceremony had taken place:

Held, that as under the Shia Law, the presence of witnesses was not necessary in any matter regarding marriage and as a marriage contracted by the spouses themselves or their guardians in private was valid, the parties were legally married, and that a marriage which was a valid marriage could not be invalidated by the desire of the parties to have a more elaborate ceremony performed later.

Muhammadan Law—contd.

Held, further, that the ceremony being complete the plaintiff was entitled to claim restitution of conjugal rights although he had agreed that he would not consummate the marriage till public ceremony was performed.

Where in a Shia marriage the essentials are present (the declaration and the acceptance expressed in such a manner as to demonstrate intention without any sort of ambiguity) the presence or the absence of religious ceremonials is immaterial and in no way affects the validity of the union.

Under the Shia Law, as in the Hanafi Law, if a woman is adult and sane, she is competent to enter into a matrimonial engagement without advice or consent from any body. A NAFISUNNISA v. MUMTAZ HUSAIN, 4 U. P. L. R. (A.) 17 539

——— Shia School—Gift of vested remainder —Donee not born—Gift, essentials of—Deed, construction of—Gift under Shia Law is contract between two parties.

The elements of 'proposal' and 'acceptance' are the essential elements of a contract of gift under Muhammadan Law and the absence of either is fatal to the validity of the gift

Among Shias the creation of a life-interest and a deferred estate, which would amount to a vested remainder under English Law, are permissible, but stand on the same footing as ordinary gifts. So that a gift of the deferred estate cannot be made in favour of a person who is not born at the time of the making of such gift.

A deed of gift provided: "I fix the annual maintenance of my daughter, Zakia Begum, and create a charge for this maintenance on 89 bighas of land. The maintenance shall subsist for her lifetime without right of transfer, and after her death shall be transferred automatically to her male issue without right of transfer. In case of necessity, the said lady or her male issue shall be entitled to transfer it for proper price to my sons or their issue:"

Held, that there was a gift of a life-interest to the daughter and a further gift in præsenti of the deferred estate in favour of her male issue and that the provision about the right of transfer for necessity did not in any way enlarge the life-estate in favour of the daughter. O SIRAJ HUSAIN v. MUSHAF HUSAIN, 24 O. If any duly qualified citizen, or burgher, or person entitled to be upon the electoral roll of any constituency is omitted from such roll so as to be deprived of his right to vote, and so as to give the Returning Officer an adequate ground for refusing him the right to vote on election day when the matter has to be decided summarily, and that refusal or omission from the roll, as the case may be, turns out on investigation to be wrongful he has suffered a legal wrong; he has been deprived of a right recognised by law and he has against the person so depriving him a remedy by "an action on the case" for nominal damages for the right that he has lost, which may, at the discretion of the Court, be punitive or exemplary, if the conduct is the result of some malicious and wicked intention: and also for any pecuniary expenses to which he may have been reasonably put as a result of the wrong done, for example efforts to re-place his name on the roll.

A suit for damages for wrong done to the plaintiff by wrongful omission to record his name correctly on the candidate's list of the Municipal Electoral Roll is rightly brought against the Municipal Board itself and individual members including the Executive Officer, and if in such a case liability is eventually established for damages, that liability in order to be placed upon the right shoulders, must be decided according to the ordinary general principles of principal and agent. No individual member of the Board can be made liable in his own pocket, separately and independently of the Board, for an act in which he had no part or lot himself and which he did not in any way authorise. On the other hand, any individual member of the Board who either expressly or indirectly encouraged, incited, directed or approved of, in other words, aided and abetted the attempt to deprive the plaintiff of his right to be on the candidates' list would be liable in his own pocket, independently altogether of the question whether or not the Municipal Board would be liable as well. The Municipal Board as principal would only be liable for their corporate act, i e, an act done by themselves by way of resolution, or by a Committee of authority appointed by them, or by one of their servants in the ordinary course of business.

In such a case a plaintiff has a right under Order II, rule 12 of Civil Procedure Code, and any Court trying such a suit has the duty, to insist that all documents in existence or which had been in existence which throw light on that question must be produced.

Where a Municipal Board is called upon to produce documents and is unable to produce them, an affidavit must be made on behalf of the Municipal Board by the Chairman or the Executive Officer, who,

A person who comes forward without being summoned and volunteers information at an enquiry under section 174 of the Criminal Procedure Code, is not bound to answer truly questions put to him under section 175 of the Code, and not being so bound, his answers, if false, cannot form the basis of a charge of perjury, having regard to the definition of that offence in section 191 of the Penal Code. L MUHAMMAD HAYAT v. EMPEROR, 23 CR. Personal decree—Arrest—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 56.

A personal or money-decree does not necessarily carry with it a right to arrest the judgment debtor.

The term "personal decree," though frequently used in commentaries, is not a statutory term and it is not every personal decree that includes the right to arrest a judgment-debtor, for example, a personal decree when passed against a woman does not involve any liability to arrest.

There is no provision of law which would protect a judgment-debtor from arrest under a decree for the payment of money properly passed against him, solely on the ground that the decree was based on a document executed on his behalf by his guardian during his minority.

Per Dhobley, A. J. C.—The proposition that no money-decree is possible which does not carry with it a right to arrest the judgment-debtor is not correct. A suit for pre-emption was decreed on condition that if the plaintiff paid a certain amount within two months he would be entitled to get possession. The money was deposited and possession obtained by the plaintiff. Meanwhile, the vendee appealed and the Appellate Court allowed a further sum to the vendee and extended the time for payment. The plaintiff did not deposit the further amount within time. The vendee then applied for execution of the decree and claimed further amount allowed to him and costs and an order issuing process was made. The plaintiff appeared and deposited a part of the further amount and got an extension of time from the Court to pay the balance though he was opposed by the vendee. Before the expiry of the extended time the vendee applied for restitution of the property on the ground that the pre-emption money not having been deposited within the time allowed by the decree the suit stood dismissed. The plaintiff objected that this application was barred by the principle of res judicata as well as by the principle of estoppel:

Held, (1) that the rule of res judicata did not apply inasmuch as neither of the proceedings in execution could be said to amount to an express adjudication by the Court, that the proper remedy of the vendee was to recover the further amount allowed to him by execution or that any such amount was actually due to him;

(2) that the circumstance that the vendee wanted to realise the further amount awarded to him by execution of the decree, which sum admittedly was not due to him, did not estop him from coming to Court and claiming restitution of the property;

(3) that the order of the Court giving the plaintiff further time to deposit the pre-emption money was without jurisdiction;

(4) that the fact of the default of payment made by the plaintiff was to dismiss the suit in toto and that his possession was wrongful and that the vendee was entitled to a full restitution.

If an executing Court expressly decides a point inter partes, that decision becomes final according to the general principles of law, though the question whether the law of res judicata applies is irrelevant as the term refers to a matter decided in another suit. A SHEO MANGAL v. HULSA, 19 A. Under section 7 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, an Insolvency Court has jurisdiction to decide matters inter se between the parties arising in the insolvency.

A Hindu father sold a portion of joint family property to a certain person, and also executed a security bond indemnifying the vendee against future litigation by his minor sons in respect of the property sold. obstruction and delivery of possession—Jurisdiction of Insolvency Court.

A purchaser from the Official Receiver of a property of an insolvent can obtain under the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1920 an order from the Insolvency Court for delivery of possession of the property, where his application is resisted by a third party; and the method of executing the warrant under section 5 will be the same as that prescribed for the executing of a warrant issued by the Court in the exercise of Original Civil Jurisdiction.

Clause 3 of section 56 of the new Provincial Insolvency Act, V of 1920, is not limited to the case of an application by the Official Receiver, but applies equally to an application by a purchaser from the Receiver for delivery of possession.

An Insolvency Court has plenary powers under the provisions of Act V of 1920 to deal with the claims of third parties. M RAMASWAMI CHETTIAR v. OFFICIAL RECEIVER, MADURA, 15 L. W. 273; (1922) M. W. N. 110; 42 M. L. J. 185 394

The returning of a plaint to the plaintiff, suing for the value of the branches of a tree cut by the defendant on the latter's pleading that the tree belongs to him, to be presented to a Court having jurisdiction to determine the question of title, does not make the case any the less a suit of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes and no second appeal lies from a decision in such a case.

Punjab Land Revenue Act (XVII of 1887), ss. 144, 158 (2) (xix)—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts—Appraisement—Power of Revenue Officer—Question of title.

Where a defendant objects to the jurisdiction of the Civil Court, it is for him to satisfy the Court that the claim made by the plaintiff is not within the cognisance of a Civil Court.

It was never contemplated by the Legislature that complicated questions of title should be determined by a referee or a Revenue Officer acting under section 144 of the Punjab Land Revenue Act. The function assigned to such officer under that section is one of a simple nature, namely, to determine the value of the produce which is admittedly joint or to divide it between the share-holders in accordance with their respective shares. Neither the language of the Statute nor the general principles of law lend any support to the contention that the Revenue Officer, and not the Civil Court, should determine whether the produce belongs exclusively to one party or whether it is the joint property of both the parties.

A suit, therefore, for the recovery of the price of certain produce alleged to have been delivered by the referee to the defendant, on the ground that it belonged exclusively to the plaintiff, is cognisable by a Civil Court. L RAMJI LAL v. MANGAL SINGH, 2 L. 302 256

It is not open to a Railway Company to enact, by means of a rule, that although as a matter of fact goods have been delivered to a duly authorised servant of the administration to be carried by the Railway, nevertheless the Court shall not deem them to be so delivered unless and until the Railway servant in question has performed a particular act, e. g, giving a receipt.

A consignor of goods by Railway, after his package had been taken over by the goods clerk and duly marked, was told to go away and come back for a Railway receipt in a couple of days' time. No receipt was taken by him The package was despatched, but was mis-sent to another destination and lost in consequence of having been so mis-sent The consignor sued for damages for the loss of the consignment. The Railway Company relied upon a rule made under section 47 (1) (f) of the Railways Act, to the effect that "goods will in all cases be at the owner's risk until taken over by the Railway Administration for despatch and a receipt in the prescribed form has been granted duly signed by an authorised Railway servant:"

Held, that if the rule put forward limited the statutory liability imposed upon the Railway Company by section 72 of the Railways Act, it was inconsistent with the Act and was of no effect and that as the goods were lost owing to negligence on the part of the company's servant, the company was liable notwithstanding no receipt was given.

Per Walsh, J.—No rule which any company can make, can cut down, control or limit its liability which is the creature of Statute under section 72 of the Railways Act and, if a rule is relied upon by the company which is inconsistent with that liability, it has clearly gone beyond the authority created for making rules.

A Railway Company is by law a common carrier. It cannot lawfully refuse to carry goods properly tendered to it. It is given statutory existence and wide statutory powers in exchange for public duties and it is bound to carry goods.

Rule 2 framed under section 47 (1) (f) of the Railways Act is not inconsistent with anything contained in the Act, inasmuch as the rule is made for regulating the terms and conditions on which the Railway Administration will warehouse or retain goods at any station on behalf of the consignee or owner and it is placed under a heading "wharfage," and has nothing whatever to do with the liability of a Railway in respect of goods which have been actually accepted by a Railway servant for despatch and have been either despatched or lost. A SOHANPAL-MUNNALAL v. EAST INDIAN RAILWAY, 20 A. On delivery there was shortage in weights and the consignee sued the Company for the price of the difference in weights:

Attestation of a deed by itself does not estop a person attesting the deed from denying anything except that he has witnessed the execution of the deed. Knowledge of the contents of the deed ought not to be inferred from the mere fact of the attestation, though an attestation may take place in circumstances which would show that the witness did in fact know of the contents of the deed.

The appellant and his two uncles were co-sharers in certain villages, of which the appellant was the registered proprietor. A deed of settlement signed by the appellant and addressed to his two uncles provided that the appellant was to manage the villages taking a salary and paying the expenses, that, if there was a loss, the uncles should make good the amount in respect of their shares on demand and that, in case of default, the uncles should lose their shares in the villages. This deed was presented for registration by one of the uncle and duly registered In the years following, there was loss in respect of one of the villages. On a demand by the appellant, the uncles wrote a letter to him that he was liable for the profit or loss accrued or accruing, that they were not to take shares and pay the loss and that he might manage as he liked. Subsequently, the uncles transferred their shares in the village in question by a deed which the appellant attested as a witness:

Held, (1) that, although the deed of settlement was only signed by the appellant, the arrangement made under it was a perfectly valid one, as it was accepted by the uncles and acted upon by the appellant;

(2) that the subsequent letter did not require registration as it was not an instrument of transfer but was only a piece of evidence showing that the uncles accepted the terms in the earlier deed of settlement and admitted that the condition upon which the first agreement was to operate had in fact arisen; and

(3) that the appellant was not estopped from denying that he was a party to the subsequent transfer by the uncles as there was no proof of his knowledge of the contents of the document he attested. P C PANDURANG KRISHNAJI v. MARKANDEYA TUKARAM, 21 C. Plaintiff brought a suit for specific performance of this agreement. It was objected by the defendant that the agreement was inadmissible in evidence for want of Specific Relief Act—concld.

Where the plaintiff is in joint possession of immoveable property, whether such possession be actual possession of his share of the whole, or actual possession of a part coupled with constructive possession of the remainder, he is entitled to maintain a suit for declaratory relief with a view to remove a cloud on his title created by the act of the defendant disputing his share; in a suit so framed declaration of title is all that the plaintiff needs and he is consequently not called upon to ask for consequential relief by way of partition

The expression used by the Legislature in section 42 of the Specific Relief Act is, not 'other relief, but 'further relief.' The further relief must consequently be relief in relation to the legal character or right as to property which the plaintiff is entitled to and whose title to such character or right the defendant denies or is interested in denying: it must also be relief appropriate to and necessarily consequent on the right or title asserted.

A suit for a declaratory decree ought not to be dismissed on the ground that it is barred by the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, unless it is quite clear that the plaintiff ought to seek further relief which he has failed to claim, although such relief flows directly and necessarily from the declaration sought for.

The proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act forbids a suit for a pure declaration without further relief, but it does not compel a plaintiff to sue for all the reliefs which could possibly be granted, or debar him from obtaining a relief which he wants unless at the same time he asks for a relief which he does not want.

The entry and possession of land by one co-owner will not be presumed to be adverse to the others, but will ordinarily be held for the benefit of all; the difference between the possesossion of a co-owner and other cases is that acts which if done by a stranger would per se be a disseisin, are, in the case of tenancies-in-common, susceptible of explanation consistently with the real title; acts of ownership are not, in tenancies-in-common, acts of dissoisin, the law will not presume that one tenant-in-common intends to oust another; the facts, if the contrary is asserted, must be notorious and the intent must be established in proof.

The possession of one joint tenant is the possession of all and there can be no dispossession by one joint tenant, in the absence of an assertion of a hostile title by him to the knowledge of the other joint tenants sought to be excluded from the joint tenancy. C JOYNARAIN SEN UKIL v. SUCHITRA DEBYA, 33 C. Although in the patta and kabuliyat by which a tenure is created there may not be words of inheritance, the omission of such words may be supplied by evidence bearing on the history of the tenure and the conduct of the parties.

A tenure which is not a permanent tenure, may nevertheless by agreement between the lessor and the lessee be saleable under the Patni Regulation (VIII of 1819).

The word taluk prima facie imports permanency.

In the year 1835 the Government purchased at a sale for arrears of land revenue a Zemindari in which there was a taluk comprising a joar or group of villages. The joar had been granted as a miras taluk by the then proprietors to one S in the year 1827 at a certain annual rent fixed in perpetuity. After the purchase of the parent estate by Government the Revenue Authorities had to consider how the estate should be dealt with, and in the year 1836 a proceeding was drawn up which concluded as follows:—"According to section 36 of Act XI of 1822 and according to the rules under clause II of sections 2 and 5 of Act IX of 1825 the re-assessment of the taluk is considered necessary. Therefore, it is ordered that the said taluk be broken up and the fixed jama of it be held null and void and re-assessment be made according to the existing rate of the pergunah" Thereafter the taluk, by exchange of patta and kabuliyat, was settled with successive settlement-holders for various terms at variable rents. On the expiry of the last term of settlement with the plaintiffs, the Government having attempted to terminate the taluk, the plaintiffs instituted a suit for a declaration of their permanent talukdari right in the joar and of their right of obtaining settlement and possession of the same at a proper rent:

Held, (1) that the effect of the proceeding of the year 1836 was not to destroy or annul the taluk but merely to put an end to fixity of its rent:

(2) that as the proceeding merely had the effect of altering one of the incidents of the old tenure and as it substituted a variable rent for a fixed rent, the terms for which the plaintiffs had engaged might properly be regarded not as terms at the close of which the plaintiffs' tenancy came to an end, but as terms on the expiry of which the rent became subject to re-assessment;

(3) that as there was nothing in the patta and the kabuliyat as exchanged between the parties or their predecessors which took away from or deprived the plaintiffs of their right to hold the tenure as a permanent tenure, so long as they paid the rent which the Government might assess upon it, the Government could not annul the tenure on the expiry of the term of settlement with the plaintiffs:

(4) that the tenure was a permanent, heritable and transferable tenure. C SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. ANANDA MOHAN ROY 145

So far as the express language of section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act is concerned, it may seem to mean that it applies only to voluntary transfers and not to an involuntary transfer but, having regard to the numerous cases decided on the point, it is impossible to hold that the doctrine of lis pendens as embodied in section 52 of the Act applies only to voluntary transfers and not to involuntary transfers.

In the case of a sale of immoveable property section 55 (1) (d) makes it a bounden duty of the seller to execute a proper conveyance of the property, and the execution of a document which for any reason does not operate to effect a legal transfer is in no way a complete performance of this bounden duty. Therefore, where a seller, being in a hurry, executes an invalid conveyance promising to follow it with a legal and binding sale-deed, the invalid conveyance is no answer to a suit for specific performance of the agreement to execute the legal and binding sale-deed.

It is a valid defence to a suit for possession by a seller that the defendant is in possession under a contract for sale, although he may have no valid registered sale-deed. L B SANTHAYI AMMAL v. MAHOMED, 11 L. B. R. 94 405

Transfer of Property Act—contd.

——— ss. 58, 59—Mortgage, operation of—Conveyance or contract—Sale-deed executed after mortgage but before payment of full consideration—Priority

A mortgage is a conveyance and not a contract. If there is nothing in a mortgage-deed to suggest that the mortgage is not to become effective until the consideration money is paid, the mortgage becomes operative as from the date of the execution of the mortgage-deed. A mere provision in the mortgage-deed that the mortgagor undertakes to make over the mortgage-deed to the mortgagee upon the payment of the full consideration money does not amount to a contract between the parties that the mortgage is not to take effect until the payment of the consideration money

Therefore, a deed of sale executed by a mortgagor after the execution and registration of the mortgage-deed but before the payment of the full consideration money of the mortgage is not entitled to priority over the mortgage-bond when there is nothing in the contract which establishes that the title is not to pass to the mortgagee as and from the date of the execution of the mortgage-bond. Pat RAGHUNATH BHAGAT v. AMIR BAKHSH, 3 P. A test to apply to determine whether a transaction amounts to a mortgage or not is to see whether any interest is to run upon the sum of money that may be due by one party to another in consideration of which the transaction is entered into.

Where in a transaction no interest is payable by the debtor to the creditor and the document expressly states that the transaction is entered into for the purpose of paying off the sum due by the debtor to the creditor, the transaction is not a mortgage.

Royalty is the price paid for a portion of the soil the payment whereof is distributed over a number of years Interest in the royalty is not an interest in immoveable property.

In order to pay off a certain debt without interest, the borrower executed a Jat meadi in respect of a certain commission due to him in respect of a certain coal land of his, and contracted that the lender shall continue to satisfy the sum borrowed by realising the commission every month, from year to year, till that month, of that year until which the entire amount is paid up but that if the income from the commission stopped the lender was to get nothing:

Held, that such a contract did not amount to a [illegible]gage and as such the deed was not one which [illegible] attestation in accordance with the provi-Vendor and purchaser—Caveat emptor—Purchaser failing to make enquiries—Defective title—Earnest money, recovery of.

Plaintiff made the highest bid at an auction for certain property and paid one-tenth of the purchase-money. He subsequently discovered that the property was involved in litigation and filed a suit to recover the amount paid by him. It was found that the sale had been duly notified and that in the conditions of sale, which were available to the plaintiff, the would-be purchasers were told to satisfy themselves as to the nature of the property sold:

Held, that the doctrine of caveat emptor applied to the case and that the plaintiff could not recover the amount paid by him. L JUGLO v. ABDUL SALAM 734

——— Contract to sell—Option to purchaser to pay amount agreed in particular month in any year—Enforceability of agreement—Executory contract—Offer to purchase—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 51—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 12.

Unless both parties agree there is no concluded agreement. It is only an offer. An instrument even though so worded as to express that both parties agree, is in point of law only an offer until both parties are bound.

Where an agreement is executory on both sides, with an option to one of the parties to do as he likes, there is nothing more than a standing offer, though it may be that, during the lifetime of the promisor the distinction between a binding offer and a complete agreement is not of much importance as between the parties.

Where in a suit for specific performance of an agreement to sell a land the promisee does not prove that the undertaking by the promisor not to withdraw the offer was not a mere nudum pactum but a binding undertaking there is no agreement which the promisee can enforce against a subsequent vendee of that property.

An agreement to sell land contained inter alia the following terms:—"On payment being made of the total amount of Rs. 800 within the 30th Vygasi of any year whatsoever, I shall execute a sale-deed to you of the lands * * * * . I shall not execute a sale-deed to any other person. Should a sale be so effected to any other person such sale shall not be valid";

Held, that the agreement was only an offer by the seller which could not be withdrawn and did not connote an agreement to buy, and that, as the seller could not charge the buyer with breach or failure to perform, there never was a contract at all. M EGALA NAGAPPA v. MUNISWAMY IYER, 30 M. A village was settled with a single proprietor up to 1836. In 1836 the settlement was made with four persons. In the wajib-ul-arz of 1860 reference to pre-emption was made for the first time:

Held, that under the circumstances it could not be said that the custom of pre-emption had grown up in 24 years, and that the statement in the wajib-ul-arz of 1860 could only be taken to mean that the then co-sharers of the village had agreed to pre-emption among themselves. A RAM GHARIB TEWARI v. SHANKAR TEWARI, 20 A. Wakf—Decree for rent against one of two mutwallis, effect of—Decree for rent against some heirs of deceased tenure-holder does not affect other heirs.

A suit for rent against one of two mutwallis of a wakf estate is bad. The decree obtained in such a suit does not bind either the other mutwalli or the wakf estate where there is nothing to show that the judgment-debtor mutwalli represented the other mutwalli or the wakf estate in the landlord's sherista.

Where on the death of a tenure-holder, a decree is obtained for rent against some of his heirs the interest of those heirs that are not parties to the decree is not affected either by the decree or by sale under that decree. C ABDUL GANI v. NABENDRA KISHORE ROY 592

Waste land—Boundary dispute—Land capable of actual possession—Burden of proof.

The principle that on questions of boundary, especially where the dividing line in dispute runs through waste lands which have not been the subject of definite possession, the rule as to the burden of proving the affirmative is not applicable, does not apply to a case where, according to both parties, the land is capable of possession and each party is in actual possession of the land comprised within his tenure.

When the defendant in a suit for recovery of possession of land, even when the question is a question of boundaries, is clearly shown or found to have been in actual possession of the disputed area the burden lies on the plaintiff to establish his title. C RADHA KRISHNA DAS v. MATIYAR RAHMAN 743

Will, construction of—Principle of construction—Court, duty of—"Malik," meaning of—Gift by husband in favour of wife—Absolute or limited estate.

It is always dangerous to construe the words of one Will by the construction of more or less similar words in a different Will, which was adopted by a Court in an another case.

In construing a Will a Court must look to all the clauses of the Will and give effect to all the clauses, ignoring none as redundant or contradictory.

The word "malik" is not a term of art, that is to say, it does not necessarily define the quality of the estate taken but the ownership of whatever that estate may be. Absolute ownership imports at least the right to exclusive and free enjoyment of the property and free power of disposition.

A deed of gift, executed by a husband in favour of his wife, referred in the preamble to the deed to the whole collection of rights and by the first clause the properties were granted to the wife as "malik," by the second clause she was given the power of alienation for charitable purposes of a portion of the property to one of the relations of the husband and to no one else, by the third clause she was given power to execute a Will in favour of one of the aforesaid relations, by the clause provison was made for undisposed of property at the conee's death, and by the fifth clause provision was made for any unmarried daughter or son's daughter of the donee, and by the last clause provision was made that if the donee died before the donor the properties undisposed of by the donee will revert to the donor. A mokarrari lease having been granted by the donee a question arose whether she had the power to grant the lease:

Held, that no absolute estate was granted to the donee and that the intention of the donor was to provide for the donee and also for the ultimate devolution of his property and that the grant in effect was the grant of an ordinary Hindu woman's estate with power to sell, or to appoint by deed or Will, to certin specified persons and that she was not empoweed to grant a mokarrari lease. Pat ASHURFI SINGH v. BISESWAR PRATAP NARAIN, (1922) PAT. 70; 3 P. enjoyment of the entire property. But, the condition is that if any of these widows misbehaves herself, thereby bringing disgrace on the family, she will forfeit her share, which will go to the remaining widow or widows; and that if any of these widows intends to transfer the property she can do it only with the consent and approval of all or the remaining widows. Thus, whatever rights I possess will be exercised after my death by the widows subject to the conditions imposed as above:"

Held, that under the terms of the above Will none of the ladies was entitled to transfer her share or any portion of it without obtaining the consent of her co-widows. O MAKHANA v. BINDESHRI PRASAD, 8 O. L. J. 656 457

No distinction on principle can be drawn between the withdrawal of a suit and the dismissal of a suit for default, but where a suit is withdrawn after witnesses have in fact been examined on behalf of the plaintiff, such withdrawal cannot be said to operate as a dismissal for default, and the opposite party is entitled to full costs. Pat MOHANT RAMKISHUN DAS v. DAULAT RAM, 3 P.
